Carter Confers With Mondale and Glenn

By CHARLES MOHR

Special to The New York Times

PLAINS, Ga., July 8—Jimmy Carter dismissed as unfounded today suggestions that Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota was too liberal to be a compatible Vice-Presidential running mate.

The former Georgia Governor, who is assured a first-ballot Democratic Presidential nomination next week, met this morning with Mr. Mondale, appeared with him at a brief joint news conference, and then began talks in the late afternoon with Senator John Glenn of Ohio, who is also under consideration for second place on the ticket.

Senator Glenn, alighting from a two-engine airplane near here with his wife, Annie, said he had detected no significant political differences between himself and Mr. Carter "up to now."

Later in the evening, when Mr. Carter and Senator Glenn spoke to reporters, Mr. Carter said that he had been surprised and impressed by the accomplishments Senator Glenn had been able to make in his relatively short period of 18 months in the Senate. Mr. Carter said Mr. Glenn was highly recommended by senior Senators, and called him a man who had interested himself in a wide range of important legislation.

Senator Mondale and his wife, Joan, appeared with Mr. and Mrs. Carter on the platform of the Old Plains railroad station, which has been converted into the hometown campaign headquarters of Mr. Carter.

In answer to a question, Mr. Carter said he had "thought a lot" about reports that Senator Earl

ISRAELIS STAGED RAID REHEARSAL

Chief of Staff, Giving Details, Says Rescue Took Less Time Than Dry Run

By TERENCE SMITH

Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, July 8 — The Israeli Army units that rescued the hijacked hostages and crew at Entebbe Airport in Uganda last weekend carried out a full-dress rehearsal of the operation the night before in Israel.

The actual rescue of the hostages, the army disclosed, took 53 minutes — two minutes less than the practice exercise the night before.

"It was almost incredible," Lieut. Gen. Mordechai Gur, the Israeli Chief of Staff, said at a news conference in Tel Aviv tonight.

Breaking a week of official silence on the operational details of the rescue, General Gur gave a comprehensive picture of the planning and execution of the operation. He held back certain details for security reasons.

The Israelis carried with them 33 doctors and two complete field surgery units to tend the wounded.

General Gur said that the Israeli units "imposed themselves" on the Kenyans in landing at Nairobi Airport on the way home. He contended that neither Kenya nor any other foreign country had any ad-

New York Court Disbars Nixon for Watergate Acts

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

Richard M. Nixon was disbarred by a New York court yesterday, marking the first time the former President has been found guilty by an official body of charges relating to Watergate.

In a 4-to-1 opinion, the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court for the First Department sustained five charges that Mr. Nixon had obstructed "the due administration of justice" and thus violated the Code of Professional Responsibility, a set of rules that all lawyers are required to observe.

The charges, which were brought by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, resembled the Articles of Impeachment drafted by the House Judiciary Committee two years ago.

The appellate court, which sits in Manhattan and admitted Mr. Nixon to practice here in 1963, found that the five charges were "substantiated by documentary evidence, such as the tapes of Mr. Nixon himself, excerpts of testimony of individuals given to various Congressional committees and affidavits."

Mr. Nixon was charged with obstructing investigations by Federal law-enforcement authorities into the 1972 Watergate break-in, with concealing evidence and with interfering with the legal defense of Daniel Ellsberg, who was on trial in 1973 on charges relating to the publication of the Pentagon Papers.

In the last two years, Mr. Nixon, who has said he never intends to practice law again,

FORD'S PROSPECTS RAISED BY SHIFTS OF UNCOMMITTED

He Also Wins 12 of the 18 North Dakota Delegates, Against 4 for Reagan

By R. W. APPLE Jr.

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8 — President Ford's prospects of winning the Republican Presidential nomination have improved significantly in recent days.

Most important, he has picked up expressions of qualified support from 22 delegates who told The New York Times in a second canvass of uncommitted delegates that they leaned strongly toward voting for Mr. Ford on the first ballot in Kansas City, Mo., next month.

He captured 12 of the 18 North Dakota delegates chosen today at the Republican State Convention in Fargo. His rival, Ronald Reagan, the former Governor of California, won four, leaving two others officially uncommitted. [Page A 12.]

Better Than Expected

It was a better showing for Mr. Ford than expected. Mr. Reagan had hoped for as many as 10 delegates in North Dakota, and the Ford forces had expressed willingness last week to take a 9-to-9 split.

The victory assured Mr. Ford of control of the crucial convention committees at Kansas City.

And the President has gained commitments from nine previously uncommitted delegates, while 11 delegates previously credited to him were moving to the uncommitted column although they may well ultimately support Mr. Ford.

While Mr. Ford's lead could evaporate in procedural infighting at the convention, it appears increasingly likely that he will arrive as the leader.

The Times's national delegate tabulation now gives the following division of strength:

Mr. Ford has 1,062 committed delegates and Mr. Reagan has 1,024, with 1,130 needed for nomination. Of the 93 who remain uncommitted, only one, William Swain Lee of Delaware, described himself as leaning toward Mr. Reagan, while 22 said they leaned to the President. Fifty were unwilling to express any preference and 20 were not reached in the second canvass.

Ford-Reagan Ticket

Adding the leaners to Mr. Ford's firm delegates, he has strong prospects of 1,084 votes, to which he is expected to add at least 30 at next weekend's Republican State Convention in Connecticut.

Even presuming that the President will be shut out at the Colorado convention this weekend and the Utah convention on July 17, he appears to have a minimum of 1,114—only 16 short of nomination—within his grasp.

One means by which Mr. Ford could acquire those last 16 was suggested in the canvass. Of 69 uncommitted delegates who answered the question, 62 said they would like

New York Hospital Union Plans to Extend Walkout

10 Municipal Institutions and 14 Nursing Homes Facing a Strike Tomorrow— No Progress Reported in Talks

By PETER KIHSS

Nursing homes began moving the first of 1,600 patients to other places yesterday in expectation of a widening of the strike to include 14 homes tomorrow, when 10 municipal hospitals are also scheduled to be struck.

Thirty-three voluntary hospitals generally contended they were managing to cope with a walkout by 30,000 mainly nonprofessional workers as the strike entered its second day. The City Health Department, meanwhile, moved to keep up their patient care.

In one dramatic action the city agency assigned 30 of its public health nurses and 25 paraprofessionals to cross striker picket lines to help out the struck St. Barnabas Hospital in the Bronx.

St. Barnabas, a 415-bed institution at 183d Street and Third Avenue, said its 100 registered nurses had walked out as members of the striking union, and the hospital appealed for city and state help to back up 15 nursing supervisors.

Striking District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees, said that only one other struck hospital, Community of Brooklyn, had nurses in the union.

Moe Foner, union executive secretary, said the union had arranged to provide one nurse for each shift. The 134-bed hospital did not respond when asked for comment later.

Mr. Foner said the union planned to extend the strike at 6 A.M. tomorrow to 14 nursing homes with more than 4,400 beds and 3,500 union members and to 10 city hospitals with which the struck voluntary hospitals have affiliation agreements. He said the union had 1,500 employees at the municipal institutions in such categories as X-ray and laboratory technicians.

"We had delayed the strike for 72 hours for the nursing homes and city hospitals," Mr. Foner said. "In the nursing homes, the additional time was to permit evacuation of patients. In the city hospitals, it was to permit them to deal with the problem."

Paul Yager, regional director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, met for nearly an hour separately yesterday with Leon J. Davis, president, and other officers of the union, and William J. Abelow, executive vice president of the 37-member League of Voluntary Hospitals and Homes.

Both sides indicated that they were adhering to prestrike positions. Mr. Foner said

Two Aides to F.B.I. Chief Reportedly Under Inquiry

The following article was written by John M. Crewdson and is based on reporting by him and Nicholas M. Horrock.

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8—A growing number of past and present executives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, including two aides close to its director, Clarence M. Kelley, have fallen under the scrutiny of the Justice Department's inquiry into alleged criminal misconduct within the bureau, according to sources close to the inquiry.

The investigation of the F.B.I., the first in the bureau's history, is considering allegations of financial corruption among high bureau officials and the commission of illegal burglaries by agents within the last five years, long after that practice was believed to have been halted.

One Federal official, asked how many bureau agents and executives have been touched by either of the two inquiries, replied that a list of their names would take up "a lot of space."

According to a variety of reliable sources in and out of the Government, the twin investigations have badly damaged the bureau's morale and the efficiency of some of its operations.

F.B.I. agents and headquarters officials, one source said, have approached prosecutors through their lawyers about the possibility of testifying against one another in exchange for immunity from prosecution.

Agents and executives alike are looking for lawyers, and approaches have been made to

SENATE TALLY IS 22-18

Legislature's Action Ends a Decade of Opposition to Earnings Impost

By ALFONSO A. NARVAEZ

Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, July 8—After more than a decade of intense resistance by the Legislature, New Jersey became tonight the 43d state in the nation to get an income tax when the Senate approved a measure passed late last night by the Assembly.

The vote was 22 to 18, one over the minimum necessary for Senate passage.

The historic vote on a graduated tax of 2 to 2.5 percent came at 8:50 P.M., with one Republican joining 21 Democrats in support of the bill.

Governor Byrne signed the bill into law an hour later and announced that he would ask the State Supreme Court to lift an injunction that had kept the state's 2,500 public schools closed since July 1.

Up to School Districts

Once the injunction is lifted, it will be up to the local school districts to decide when to reopen their schools. Most would be likely to opt for Monday morning, since the order would not be effective until midmorning tomorrow.

The State Supreme Court had ordered the schools shut on July 1 because their heavy reliance on property taxes discriminated against poorer districts and thus violated the State Constiution's mandate of a "thorough and efficient" education for every student.

The Governor signed the bill in his office, surrounded by members of the Democratic majority who had put together the package of compromise bills that brought about adoption of the income tax. He used 15 pens to sign the tax package and presented them to supporters.

"This is the toughest task that the Legislature has faced in the last century," Governor Byrne said as he signed the measure. "Although it's not a giant leap toward real tax reform, it nevertheless is a significant contribution."

The Governor was flanked

TV's Use of Fiber Transmission Begins

By LES BROWN

A glass fiber as thin as a human hair, carrying pulses of light from a fixed source, was activated yesterday to carry television pictures in place of a standard three-quarter inch coaxial cable, marking the first working use in cable television of the new light-wave communications technology.

This technology is also beginning to find use in the computer, aircraft and telephone industries, all of which are conducting major experiments with it.

The employment of the fiber for television—a development that not long ago was projected as not becoming practical until around the end of the century—is being discussed by engineers as the most significant advance in electronics since the introduction of the transistor in the early 1950's.

After weeks of experimentation, Teleprompter Manhattan Cable Television put into daily use an 800-foot length of optical fiber at its transmission facility to carry signals from receiving equipment on the rooftop to the central processing center 34 floors below.

"The picture is coming through razor sharp," William J. Bresnan, president of Teleprompter Cable, remarked enthusiastically after the initial transmission.

Mr. Bresnan predicted that from this modest debut, light-wave technology would soon be extended in cable television to trunk lines under the streets and eventually to the household connections, because of its economic and technical advantages over coaxial cable.

"I expect the fibers to be quite commonly used by the end of this decade," Mr. Bresnan stated.

The immediate economic advantage of the fiber for television purposes is that it carries a picture a longer distance than a coaxial cable before there is need to regenerate the signal. Conventional copper cables require repeater amplifiers at the rate of around three to a mile to prevent a loss of definition; the glass fiber requires amplification only every 1.5 miles.

Moreover, because the fiber contains no metal it is inexpensive to manufacture, and because it is so thin, even with

Tibetan God-Kings' Ancient Castle Is at Once Magnificent and Dead

Following is another dispatch by the first Western journalist in many years to be permitted by China to visit Tibet. The author is a former correspondent in Asia for The Times of London.

By NEVILLE MAXWELL
Special to The New York Times

LHASA, Tibet — What the Acropolis was to old Athens the Potala is to Lhasa. If it stood on flat ground the Potala would still be assertive, even dominating, but in fact it rears up from a great hill of sharp rock that stands almost sheer from the plain.

The Potala is a palace on a castle, on a mighty pedestal of rock. It is without doubt one of the most magnificent buildings in the world, and it still looms over the little modern town of Lhasa, whose outskirts have now reached the base of the Potala's hill.

Palace of God-Kings

The architectural strength of the Potala may spring essentially from its lack of symmetry. It appears to have grown rather than to have been built, to be as natural and massively immutable as its rock pedestal.

The walls, towering 13 stories high in the main structure, lean inward, and the innumerable windows taper to their tops, both reflecting the natural lines of the hill. Beneath the lowest rank of windows great blank curtains of wall rear up, and their color, once white, now cream, sets off the ocher red of the central upper massif of the structure.

This was until 1959 the palace of the god-kings, the line of Dalai Lamas who were believed by the Buddhist faithful to reincarnate successively the same divine spirit and who were therefore recognized as both spiritual pontiff and absolute temporal ruler in Tibet. There has been a castle on this hill for some 1300 years, but the present structure dates from the 17th century.

The impact the Potala had on travelers when it was the sympolic center of the Buddhist faith and the headquarters of a bizarre and mysterious theocracy may be judged by this, written at the beginning of the century, when prose could be purple unabashedly:

"Here, in these uttermost parts of the earth, uplifted high above humanity, guarded by impenetrable passes of rock and ice, by cliffs of sheer granite, by the hostility of man and by the want of food and fuel, here was no poor Oriental town arrogating to itself the dignity, which mystery can in itself confer. From the first moment the splendor of the Potala cannot be hidden though, like all great monuments, further acquaintance does but increase one's amazement and admiration."

The author of that passage, Perceval Landon, who came as a correspondent behind the Maxim guns of Britain's invading expedition of 1904, saw, however, that the Potala was the symbol of the "vast erection of power and pride which separates the priestly caste of Tibet from the real truths of the religion they have prostituted."

The aura of the Potala was magnified in the past by knowledge of the absolute and ruthless temporal power that it housed so slendidly. Another Englishmen, who described the Potala in 1935, found in its great bulk "a lurking grimness" and ascribed that sense to his awareness of one particular political prisoner he knew of whose eyes had been gouged out and who lay dying then in an oubliette far down beneath the gilded summit.

Lifeless as Versailles

Now that ambiance of power has quite gone. The Potala is dead, as lifeless as the palaces of Versailles. Like them it represents the pomp and power of an authority, once held unchallengeable by its subjects, which in the event crumbled instantly on impact with the forces of a new order.

The last of the Dalai Lamas, 14th of his line, who fled or was taken to India in 1959 by the rebels who had risen in the cause of an independent Tibet, is now an exile. The few monks left in priestly life of the hundreds of thousands in the old order appear to have no feelings of reverence left for him; the serf monks who now control the Drepung Monastery, Lhasa's greatest, have decorated one of their halls with bitter cartoons showing the Dalai Lama bearing the treasure of Tibet as an offering to the Indian Government. Some years before his departure the Dalai Lama had, with foresight, exported through Sikkim for his future a great store of bullion and jewels.

Since 1961 the Chinese central Government has listed the Potala as a historical relic, and it is carefully maintained. Some of the rebels of 1959 made a brief stand behind the three-yard-thick walls of the Potala but, in the Chinese account of the fighting, they were put under accurate rifle and machine-gun fire, which routed them out without inflicting more than superficial damage to the structure. Certainly now there is no sign of any damage.

Long Climb Up Stairs

The main approach to the Potala is a long climb up a great, shallowly stairs ramp that zigzags up the front (southern) face of the structure. Up that hard way there used slowly to stream all day long serfs and slaves, carrying on their backs in wooden casks water for the countless offertory bowls that brimmed always before the many altars and for the monks' incessant buttered tea, and more butter for the endless, never doused altar lamps. Western travelers filmed that sluggish human tide in the 1930's, and the effort of the labor is evident on the screen.

Now the visitor enters the Potala by a back way, up a track that can just be managed by motor vehicle. From courtyards flooded with the magnificent Lhasa sunshine one steps through massive doors into a world of shadows. The Potala now is a curiosity, an immense and essentially bizarre relic. But it needs only a little imagination, once inside, to resuscitate its still recent past.

Sound probably is what is missing most, the shuffle of the feet of the thousand monks and more who tended the altars and, sitting in long rows on pillows proportionate to their rank, filled the prayer halls to the rafters with the endless cyclical incantations that made them vocal equivalents of the prayer drums, great kegs filled with paper inscribed over and again with the single mantra "Hail to the jewel in the lotus." Turn the barrel—they still rotate at a touch—and, in Lamaist theory, the prayers within were activated, beamed up to a celestial computer that sorted and registered them to the spiritual credit of whoever had turned the barrel.

Now the Potala is quite silent, only the brisk voices of guides are raised in its halls, the gongs and conches are unsounded.

The entrance now is through cavernous high halls, the walls pigeonholed as far as the eye can penetrate the shadows with receptacles for books—layers of dusty scholasticism, printed from wood blocks onto unbound sheaves tied between two boards. From there the way lies through a mounting series of chapels and repositories. From these the gloom that was the heart of their mystery and power has been banished, though only by single electric bulbs or, sometimes, curtains and grime removed from upper windows. The result is the disclosure of endless arrays of richly garbed figurines, many identical, as if mass-produced, of all sizes from six-inch miniatures in multitudes behind glass panes, to the towering Buddha figures of sometimes 30 or 40 feet.

The images of benignity are only a part, and some would say the lesser part, of Tibetan Lamaism. Buddhism, when it was brought here from beyond the Himalayas, overlaid the animist and devil-worshiping local faith but was infused by it. As counterpoint to the rows of seraphic figures stand ogres and fiends, and murals of damnation and suffering abjoin scenes of seraphic bliss. The powerful erotic element that informs Tantric Buddhism in, say, Bhutan is muted here and, when it does appear in the seated sexual embrace that is a motif of Hindu temple sculpture, the joined loins are prudishly veiled with swathings of brocade.

The religious heart of the Potala lies in the funeral chambers of former Dalai Lamas. Their mummified corpses—the corporeal trade-ins, so to speak, of the reincarnating spirit—sit cross-legged within chortens, elaborate coffins or rather sarcophagi that tower up 40 to 60 or 70 feet, depending upon the eminence of that particular incarnation and, no doubt, the strength of the exchequer of the day.

Into these chortens has poured the wealth of Tibet and the tribute treasure brought from the ends of the Buddhist world. That of "the Great Fifth," as the fifth Dalai Lama is known, is alone said to contain nearly 1,200 pounds of gold—but the worth of that is counted less than that of the precious stones which stud it.

Priceless and Tawdry

At the base of the chortens stand offerings, some priceless, some tawdry. In perhaps the 1920's, some traveling Tibetan seems to have imported from Europe bunches of artificial flowers and, in crystal vases among the sumptuous Oriental hangings, that touch of the Occident jars.

The chortens rise within the building for several stories and can be seen from above as well as below from balconies and the sumptuous prayer rooms of the high lamas. There is something about the layout reminiscent of missiles on hardened pads.

The golden roofs that top the red central palace of the Potala relate to the living quarters of the Dalai Lamas, from whose private chapels and prayer rooms, audience chambers and studies the incumbent pontiff might walk out onto the flat roof to rest his eyes from the oppressive crimsons and golds of his religious ambiance and look out on his temporal kingdom under Lhasa's magnificent sky. The whole length of the valley, as far as the eye can see in both directions, is displayed, and Lhasa, for all its new streets and spreading factory quarter, looks dwarfed beneath.

Behind the Potala, on the plain again, there is a walled park once enclosed for the high lamas who used the brilliant little temple there, set on an island in a lake. Now cattle graze there, and herd boys strip off to splash in the marshy ponds; dragon flies swarm like midges among poplar groves, and Tibetan girls in their Sunday finery pose for photographs on the hump-backed bridge to the temple.

The scene is almost Arcadian, but redolent of life as the Potala can never have been.

Airline Chief Is 7th Held By Japan in Payo

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, July 8—Japanese authorities investigating the Lockheed payoff scandal made their seventh arrest today taking into custody the head of Japan's largest airline and more arrests were expected later.

Sixty-one-year-old Tokuji Wakasa, president of All Nippon Airways, was by far the most prominent person to be arrested so far in the continuing investigations into Lockheed's payment of $12.5 million in commissions, fees and bribes to promote the sale of its aircraft in Japan.

He was accused of having violated the foreign exchange law and of having committed perjury in testimony on the Lockheed affair before a committee of Parliament.

The scandal, which came to light in February in the testimony of Lockheed officials in Washington, has shaken the conservative government of Prime Minister Takeo Miki.

Party Is Divided

Mr. Miki's determination to allow the investigators to pursue their work free of political influence has opened deep rifts in the governing Liberal Democratic Party on the ground that bribery evidence could lead the police to some influential party leaders and thus affect the organization's internal balance of power.

Some of Mr. Miki's opponents within the party, led by its vice president, Etsusabunro Shiina, sought unsuccessfully to oust the Prime Minister in May.

A temporary party truce was patched together, allowing Mr. Miki more time to "clarify" the Lockheed affair before the next bid to unseat him.

The arrest today was the latest step in that process. Specifically, Mr. Wakasa is accused of accepting large sums of Lockheed money, which entered Japan without the proper foreign exchange registration procedure.

He is also accused of lying when giving sworn testimony in February and March to a Parliamentary budget committee. He said he was never made aware of his company's signed options to buy DC-10 airliners from Douglas Arcraft when he assumed the presidency in 1970.

Options Dropped

All Nippon Airways later dropped the options and bought 21 Lockheed L-1011 TriStars. Others have testified that Mr. Wakasa had been informed of the contract between Douglas Aircraft and All Nippon Airways, the world's seventh largest passenger carrier.

Of the seven arrests so far in the Lockheed affair, five have been officials of All Nippon Airways. Yesterday, Koichi Fujiwara the airlines management director, was taken into custody on charges of currency law violations.

The 48-year-old Mr. Fujiwara is a longtime employee whose recent responsibilities during

British Envoy Tries to Trace Missing Uganda Hostage

NAIROBI, Kenya, July 8 (Reuters)—The British High Commissioner in Uganda, James Hennessy, returned to his post today and began trying to trace Dora Bloch, an elderly hostage who was left behind in a hospital after the Israeli rescue mission at Entebbe airport.

The High Commission, or embassy, in Kampala said Mr. Hennessy, who broke off home leave to return, had asked to see the head of the Uganda Foreign Ministry to check the whereabouts of the 73-year-old woman, who has dual British and Israeli citizenship.

Mr. Hennessy has been reported to be on good terms with President Adi Amin. But a member of the President's staff said by telephone that no request had been received for the High Commissioner to meet the Uganda leader.

Earlier, when questioned about Mrs. Bloch, an aide told reporters: "Don't ask us, ask Israel."

The aide said Mrs. Bloch was discharged last Friday from Kampala's Mulago Hospital, where she had been given treatment after a bone stuck in her throat. He insisted that she was among more than 100 hostages flown out by the Israeli raiders on Sunday.

United Press International
Dora Bloch

But in the British House of Commons yesterday a Government minister said Mrs. Bloch had been visited in the hospital by a member of the High Commission on the day after the Israeli raid.

The diplomat reported that she was being guarded by two men in plainclothes and that he was denied access to her when he returned an hour later.

Mulago Hospital sources said their records showed that Mrs. Bloch was admitted last Friday but listed no details of her treatment or discharge from the hospital.

Mrs. Bloch was said to have been taken to a private ward at the hospital, where Uganda soldiers wounded in the Israeli raid were also treated.

Responsibility Denied

Uganda radio broadcast a Ministry of Health statement denying knowledge of her whereabouts and adding: "When the Israeli invasion took place, Israel assumed full responsibility for all hostages and from that moment the Government of Uganda ceased to be responsible for them."

The Somali Ambassador, Hashi Abdullah Farah, who acted as mediator for the hijackers at Entebbe and saw the hostages several times, also said he knew nothing of Mrs. Bloch.

Described by an Israeli newspaper as the widow of a Welsh-born Israeli violinist, Mrs. Bloch was on her way to New York when the hijackers seized a French airliner over Greece. She was planning to attend the wedding of a son, Daniel Bloch, political correspondent for the Israeli paper Davar.

Mr. Hennessy is due to return to London from Kampala during the weekend to report on his investigations.

Report Unconfirmed

LONDON, July 8 (AP)—The Foreign Office said today it could not confirm a report that Dora Bloch was dragged screaming from her bed in a Kampala hospital by four men Sunday night. A son, Daniel Bloch, has said there were such reports.

Kenya Attacks Amin

NAIROBI, Kenya, July 8 (Reuters)—The simmering feud between Kenya and Uganda has produced a verbal attack on President Idi Amin as the world's greatest dictator, a fascist, a warmonger and a sadist.

The Nairobi Government said in a statement yesterday that the Kenyan people's patience had snapped as the result of an increasingly shrill campaign by Uganda accusing Kenya of involvement in the Israeli raid on Entebbe airport over the weekend.

The final straw appeared to be an accusation by Uganda, broadcast for most of the day by Uganda radio, that 30 enemy aircraft were seen on radar approaching the country from Kenya.

"Incessantly desirous of shedding blood, sadist Amin has driven the Government and people of Kenya to a point where tolerance and willingness to understand are no more a virtue," the statement declared.

Noting that the planes had not been reported as having reached Uganda, the statement added: "We must conclude that their radar is as faulty as their dreams."

"This is the latest attack from a warmongering neighbor whose meaning of leadership for the last five years has been savagery, torture and mass murders of innocent people," the statement said.

Son Appeals to Muhammad Ali

An appeal has been made to boxing champion Muhammad Ali to intercede with President Idi Amin of Uganda in behalf of a woman hostage left behind in a Kampala hospital after the Israeli rescue mission at Entebbe airport.

Daniel Bloch, who made the appeal in New York yesterday, said he believed that his mother, Dora Bloch was still alive.

vance word of the operation. Strict secrecy was necessary, he said, to prevent disclosure.

The entire operation took 99 minutes. After the C-130 containing the hostages took off from Entebbe Airport, Israeli troops apparently remained behind for about 35 minutes to secure the airport and prevent pursuit.

General Gur also said that Israeli troops carefully examined the bodies of the seven hijackers killed during the operation and succeeded in identifying them. Three other guerrillas apparently escaped during the operation or were not at the airport at the time.

General Gur estimated that a force of 60 to 100 Uganda soldiers was stationed at the airport and guarding the terminal where the passengers were being held. The first exchange of fire was with the Ugandans, he said, followed by a brief fire fight with the hijackers. "It was all over in minutes," he said.

While one Israeli unit freed the hostages, a second blew up six to 10 Uganda MIG jet fighters parked on runways, while still a third secured the newer, commercial portion of the airport to prevent interference in the operation.

Uganda troops opened fire on the Israelis from the airport control tower. It was during this exchange that the single Israeli soldier killed in the operation—a 30-year-old American who was commanding one of the units—was cut down by a bullet in the back.

The Men Who Took Part

General Gur said that the raiding party consisted of paratroopers, infantry, medics, doctors, communication units, air force ground personnel and other specialists. The advance intelligence for the operation, he said, had been gathered by all of Israel's intelligence services, civilian and military.

The planning for the operation began shortly after the first news of the hijacking was received in Israel but it was not until Saturday morning—six days later—General Gur said, that "all the elements came together and I could go and say to the Cabinet that we had a plan that could be executed, not just discussed."

The operation, the general said, was a "calculated risk," adding that "the results, both political and military, far exceeded our expectations."

Bonn Asks Vienna's Backing For U.N. Move on Terrorism

VIENNA, July 8 (Reuters)—Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany sought Austria's support today for a Common Market initiative that would generate worldwide action against terrorism.

German officials said the Austrian Chancellor, Bruno Kreisky, showed "a great degree of understanding" for a projected convention that the West Germans want submitted to the United Nations General Assembly in September.

West Germany is taking the lead in pressing for joint action by the nine-nation Common Market. Austria, not in the Common Market, has special close relations with it.

Waldheim Calls for Action to Combat Terrorism

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., July 8—Secretary General Kurt Waldheim called on the world community in a statement today to act urgently against the "increasingly pervasive and pernicious practice of terrorism."

The Security Council, at the demands of African members, will meet tomorrow to take up their charge that Israel's rescue of hijacked hostages at Entebbe airport in Uganda was a case of "wanton aggression."

Western countries, meanwhile, were working to expand the Council debate to a broader consideration of curbing hijacking and terrorism.

Mr. Waldheim's statement was issued because he had been criticized in Israel, the United States and elsewhere for his earlier comments that the Israeli commando raid was a "serious violation of the sovereignty" of Uganda. In one news agency report from Cairo he was quoted incorrectly as describing the Israeli action as a "flagrant aggression."

Visited by Herzog

Chaim Herzog, Israel's chief delegate, went to see Mr. Waldheim today and said later that he would pass along to his Government Mr. Waldheim's explanation that he had not intended to prejudge whatever action the Council would take by describing the Israelis as having violated Uganda's sovereignty.

Mr. Herzog, who has asked to speak at the Council's opening meeting, said that the evidence now available should leave no doubt that President Idi Amin of Uganda had collaborated with the hijackers, who seized the Air France plane over Greece.

"The Security Council in all logic should get down to it now and work to combat terrorism and eliminate this plague from the world," Mr. Herzog declared, saying such a course would help improve the world organization's image.

But he added: "If on the other hand, the United Nations continues its barren diatribe and paranoic obsession with Israel, then this will bring the United Nations down a few more rungs in the direction of oblivion."

Congratulations Received

The Israeli delegate said that in private conversations he had received congratulations for the rescue operation from delegates from every continent and nearly every political grouping. Many were from countries that broke diplomatic relations with Israel under Arab pressure, he said.

The Foreign Minister of Uganda, Juma Oris, is on his way to New York to lead his country's delegation in the Council debate.

African members were already circulating informally a toughly worded proposed resolution that would strongly condemn Israel's "aggression" as a violation of Uganda's sovereignty and territorial integrity and demand compensation for damages inflicted in the raid at Entebbe airport.

The United States would be certain to use its veto to block a resolution condemning the Israeli action, according to delegates, and it was uncertain how much support would be mustered by such a text from countries outside of the Communist bloc or the third world.

Western members were said to be working on a countermeasure, stressing the need for action against hijacking and terrorism, that might make allowance for African demands by making a mention of the need for respecting the independence and sovereignty of all countries.

SOUTH KOREA FREES 18 CHRISTIAN CLERGY

Special to The New York Times

SEOUL, South Korea, July 8—The South Korean police have quietly released the 18 Christian clergymen they arrested last month on suspicion of pro-Communist activities.

Among the last to be freed from the Seoul Prison on Tuesday evening was the Rev. Pak Hyong Kyu, the chief missionary worker of the Metropolitan Community Organization.

The 18 missionaries were secretly arrested over a period of five weeks in what appeared to have been one of the largest police crackdowns here against Christians. Because they minister primarily to slum dwellers in this city of 6.8 million inhabitants, they said they were "misunderstood" as furthering the Communist cause.

According to church sources here, the clergymen were freed after they had signed a statement pledging loyalty to the state and that they would never again work among slum dwellers.

Queen Turns the Tables and Entertains Hundreds in Washington

By LINDA CHARLTON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8—Queen Elizabth II, who has been entertained by her hosts for the last few days, returned the compliment tonight with a dinner for 84 and a reception for 1,600 at the British Embassy.

The main events of the third day of the Queen's six-day tour were a dedication service, with President Ford, of the nave of the National Cathedral, and lunch in the Statuary Hall of the Capitol, the first room put to the torch by the British in 1812.

Tonight's embassy-dinner guests included, besides President and Mrs. Ford, British and commonwealth diplomats and the usual sampling of Washington officialdom.

Also among those invited to dine on saddle of lamb in rose-hung tents in the embassy gardens were Bob Hope and Elizabeth Taylor, both British-born, George Meany, the labor leader, and his wife and Henry Steele Commager, the historian.

Lines started forming outside the Gothic Episcopal cathedral at 2:30 A.M., officials there said, and its 5,000 seats were filled an hour before a trumpet fanfare played by white-uniformed Royal Marines from the chancel steps announced the arrival of the Queen and the President.

Both heads of state watched as two workmen dropped into place in the nave a 1,000-year-old stone from Westminster Abbey in London. Then they proceeded to their stalls in the transept. The Queen and her husband, Prince Philip, had stalls and prie-dieus at one side of the transept, facing the high altar; President and Mrs. Ford were on the other side.

The small, slender Queen, unlik the others, had two kneeling cushions. The topmost cushion, square, in a red and blue pattern, was needlepointed for the cathedral by Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother.

A Silent Figure

The Queen, wearing a green-and-white dress and hat, did not speak a word aloud during the service. She was an entirely symbolic figure at the dedication "for the reconciliation of peoples of earth." The half-hour service was rich with the colors of stained glass, of purple cassocks and silver trumpets, and with the reedy voices of the choir's boy sopranos and the thunder of the organ.

The music ranged from a chorale by the jazz pianist Dave Brubeck to hymns. Most of the congregation, including Prince Philip, joined in "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," just before the Queen and the President departed.

TheNew York Times/Teresa Zabala

Queen Elizabeth I and President Ford greeting Secretary of State Kissinger and his wife, Nancy, on the receiving line at the British Embassy in Washington last night.

At the Capitol, the Queen was greeted by the army's First Battalion, Third Infantry unit, the "Old Guard," in Revolutionary War uniforms, carrying muskets with fixed bayonets. The honor guard carried both the American and the British flags—but the Union Jack, according to a knowledgeable British visitor, was upside down.

Tables in Statuary Hall

The Statuary Hall, recently refurbished for the Bicentennial and restored to its 19th-century splendor, was set with small round tables and one long head table. There were two small fountains in the center of the floor, roses on the tables, and a string quartet plus flutist, in 18th-century dress, playing 18th-century music.

The Queen, sitting between Speaker Carl Albert and Vice President Rockefeller, never got to dessert. She looked at her tiny wristwatch as the meal moved through its six courses—a signal for the speeches to start—and drank no wine except for a sip of champagne for a toast. Instead, a bottle of Malvern water, an English mineral water, stood at her place as usual.

Mr. Albert, in his speech, recalled that during the War of 1812 a British officer stood in the Speaker's chair in the room and gave the order for the burning of the Capitol to begin. "The only fire that burns here today is one that warms our hearts," he said.

The Queen, after a quick touch of lipstick, made a short speech in her usual style, speaking clearly, with little inflection, in a rather high, surprisingly young voice and reading from a typed text. She wished Mr. Rockefeller a happy birthday—he was 68 today—and went on:

"It has not altogether escaped my notice that there is some sort of celebration going on in America! It has, I believe, something to do with that event, 200 years ago, when the Founding Fathers of this great Republic—acting in what I like to think was a typically British fashion—broke the constitutional ties between America and Britain."

The Queen continued, as she has in every speech thus far, to stress the importance of British-American friendship in a "troubled and uncertain world." Then she went to have a look at the copy of Magna Carta that the British have lent the Americans for this Bicentennial Year. This document, signed by an unwilling King John in 1215, was the first in English history to put restraints on the power of a monarch.

From the Capitol, the Queen went to the Smithsoniart Institution, founded as the result of a bequest by an Englishman, James Smithson, and the National Gallery of Art. At the gallery, as elsewhere, there were lines of patient, overheated but determined Queen-watchers and tourists, armed with cameras and occasionally with British flags, waiting for a glimpse.

Tonight, the Queen greeted Mr. Ford at the head of the Embassy staircase, and the President could be heard apologizing for Mrs. Ford's absence, the result of a head cold.

The Queen appeared less stiff than at the White House last night. After all, she was on her own turf. As the dinner guests whipped through the receiving line, some curtsying and some not, Prince Philip stood with his left hand tucked under the tails of his evening clothes.

Just before the Royal party arrived, the anticipatory tension was relieved as Bluffy, the gray embassy cat, sauntered along the hallway toward the ballroom.

After going through the receiving line, theguests went on to dinner in the embassy ballroom. Here the tables were decorated with roses, some 5,000 of them donated by an association of rose growers. At the long head table the centerpiece of roses stretching along the table came from the embassy gardens. The roses there, in full bloom early last month, had been the object of hope, devotion and possibly prayer by the embassy gardeners.

ures were based on official counts. He said he could not explain how the counts had been made in the remote, inaccessible Baliem valley, where the threat of fresh landslides made evacuation necessary.

The Social Welfare Minister said there were 15,000 survivors in the stricken area waiting for evacuation. But he said the terrain and the large numbers waiting for help made it difficult to evacuate them by helicopter.

The safest way, he said, would be to guide them out. He estimated that it would take at least 10 days for them to walk to safety.

The Antara press agency reported that planes could not be used to pick up the survivors because the two airstrips in the area had been badly damaged by the earthquake.

The Social Welfare Minister said the Government had flown 50 tons of rice to the area, and other assistance had come from the local government, businesses and missionary groups.

Mr. Mintaredja said people in the area still lived in Stone Age conditions, hunting wild animals and eating sweet potatoes, wild fruits and vegetables. They depend on wild herbs for medicine, he added.

While the earthquake struck June 26, reports of casualties began filtering out only this week because of the remote and primitive area in which the quake struck.

The quake area, which was said to spread over 1,000 square miles, was shaken by new tremors as recently as last Sunday.

The quake registered 7.2 on the open-ended Richter scale. A magnitude of 7 means a major quake capable of widespread destruction. The quake that hit northern Italy in May killing more than 970 people had registered 6.5.

The province of West Irian occupies the western half of the island of New Guinea. The eastern half is Papua New Guinea, which obtained its independence from Australia last year.

West Irian, the easternmost part of Indonesia, was the last segment of the former Dutch East Indies to be acquired by the Indonesian Government.

The territory and its more than 700,000 Papuan tribesmen were transferred from the United Nations to Indonesian administration in May, 1963. It became a part of Indonesia in 1969 after a controversial "act of free choice," in which tribal chiefs were consulted on behalf of the Papuans of West Irian, who are racially, ethnically, linguistically and culturally unlike the rest of the Indonesian people.

Malaysian Life Is Disrupted by Drive on Red Insu

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
Special to The New York Times

IPOH, Malaysia, July 1—Malaysia, a quiet, orderly country with a thriving economy and a strong sense of identity, has been gripped by fear of a fledgling Communist insurgency.

The result has been a shift in national priorities, widespread arrests and extensive military operations in the remote jungles north and west of here that have spilled over into southern Thailand, leading to a diplomatic confrontation between the two Southeast Asian neighbors.

"If we do not take this insurgency seriously now, we may live to regret it in future years," said Gen. Jaffar Onn, brother of Prime Minister Hussein Onn and the principal field commander in the new battle against the Communists. His assessment is shared from the top levels of the Government through the police and military down to the most remote village.

The New York Ti

At a roadblock outside Ipoh, in northern Malaysia, a soldier checks a driver's identification papers movement of terrorists, cars are not allowed past checkpoints after 6 P.M. without special pe

Extensive Campaign

Fear of the insurgency had largely been confined to Government officials and military men until extensive efforts were made in recent weeks by the officials and members of the principal political party, the United Malay National Organization, to communicate concern to the public. As an opposition member of Parliament put it recently, "the people's lives are now being sufficiently upset by all of this that they are beginning to think maybe there's something going on."

The five-year development plan, expected to be unveiled Friday, is understood to have replaced priority for rural development with priority for security.

In many areas funds are being poured into poor villages believed to be anti-Communist while neighboring villages believed sympathetic to the Communists are ignored. Civil liberties, long the strength of Malaysian democracy, are being suspended.

Yet the question lingers: How important and how serious is the insurgency and the Communist threat to this small land of 12 million people that is nearly 2,000 miles away from a Communist country?

Visit Confirms Activity

A recent tour through the northern provinces and into southern Thailand, including talks with military and police commanders and villagers in the affected areas, confirmed that there is insurgent activity. What is at issue is the size and nature of the insurgency—its direction and ideological commitment.

At most the number of guerrillas operating in peninsular Malaysia at any time does not exceed 300 to 500, divided into "assault squads" of 3 to 12 or so.

According to figures compiled by the Ministry of Home Affairs and the Special Branch of the police, the principal internal-security intelligence group, 2,000 to 3,000 more are based in jungle training camps in southern Thailand, where Malaysia maintains, they are virtually ignored by the Thais.

By all accounts the guerrillas are a motley lot. Some have recently been recruited by virtual conscription in southern Thailand. Others are poor, disaffected peasants who believe, frequently with considerable justice, that they are ignored by the federal Government in Kuala Lampur. Most are Chinese who for years have been the subject of discrimination and calumny by the Malay majority.

Seen as Outlaw Bands

Many people who live in the rural areas, including some long-time European planters and others, believe that the largest percentage of the jungle fighters are little more than small outlaw bands, frequently youths who have run afoul of the law or small-time opium growers, all of whom the Government has lumped as Communists.

Few apart from the senior leaders of the group that calls itself the Communist Party of Malaya seem to have any ideological commitment.

The principal leaders of the party, which moved from the Cameron Highlands of Malaysia into the Betong salient of southern Thailand more than 20 years ago, are clearly oriented to Peking, according to C. C. Too, director of psychological warfare for Malaysia, who has followed Communist developments in Malaysia since the British colonial administration put down Communist insurgents in 1948-60.

The head of the main faction—a splinter group broke away several years ago—is Chin Peng, a veteran Chinese activist who has visited Peking and Indochina.

While the direct connection with Peking is somewhat tenuous, analysts such as Dr. Too believe that the guerrillas receive guidance from the Voice of the Malayan Revolution, which broadcasts from southern China. They also point to prominent mentions of Malaysian Communist activities in the Peking press. However, there does not seem to be any major assistance from outside.

Malaysia has adopted two principal strategies in its anti-Communist campaign: repeated sweeps of the jungles to unearth food and ammunition dumps, and infiltration and destruction of Communist cells and sympathizers in populated areas.

The activities have been disrupting Malaysian society on a broad scale, particularly in rural areas and among intellectuals and Chinese in urban areas.

Curfews have been imposed in many villages, and in some cases whole districts have been unable to farm because of 24-hour restrictions. Wanted posters have gone up in villages, sweeps by security policemen are made regularly. Allegations of conspiracy have resulted in the arrests of journalists and Chinese merchants and of many who at one time or another—sometimes 20 years ago—sympathized with left-wing or Communist organizations.

Under an internal security act promulgated last year, no trials are permitted; detention is automatic and indefinite.

As the military and paramilitary operations have grown, many of those on duty must live in the jungles for as much as three months at a stretch, receiving their supplies from helicopters. "We must sometimes spend 3,000 hours in the jungle for one 12-second sighting of a terrorist," General Jaffar Onn said.

A few of his men have been wounded, sometimes seriously, by booby traps and other anti-personnel devices, all crude and home-made.

An operation in which the Malaysian Air Force's American-made jets struck a suspected Communist base camp in northern Malaysia touched off the latest round of differences with Thailand. The camp, it turned out, had been inaccurately pinpointed and was just ove the ill-defined border in Thailand.

Premier's Visit Canceled

Demonstrations by Thais followed, and the Bangkok Government demanded the removal of the Malaysian policemen stationed in Betong as well as renegotiation of the border treaty that had allowed hot pursuit by Malaysian forces.

A visit to Malaysia by the Thai Prime Minister, Seni Pramoj, was canceled and heated words have been exchanged. Thailand accused Malaysia of assisting Malay separatists o ern Thailanc believes Tha ing the Comm ts back.

E.E.C. SETS UP FUND ON RAW MATERIALS

BRUSSELS, July 8 (Reuters)—A Common Market plan to aid producers of raw material formally came into being today when the governing body of the European Community signed accords with 17 developing countries worth $86 million.

Hailed as a milestone in cooperation between rich and poor countries, the so-called Stabex fund promises financial compensation for any drop in the export earnings of poor countries heavily dependent on one or two raw materials.

The fund is part of the trade and aid convention linking the Common Market and 46 developing countries in Africa, the Caribbean and the Pacific.

Final agreements were signed only after several months of juggling with figures. The commission had difficulties in fitting claims by the producer countries into its annual financial ceiling of $90 million.

The biggest problem was a drop in world prices last year of certain commodities; especially timber, coffee and cotton. This raised fears that the fund would not be big enough to meet all claims.

Celebrating its 100th Anniversary Presents

Centenergy'76

Energy Conservation Study House*

Long Island Savings Bank has sponsored the construction of this energy conservation study house to show our people some of the things that can be done today to save and conserve energy.

LOCATION: Hamilton Square, Mt. Sinai, L.I.

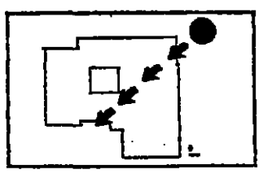
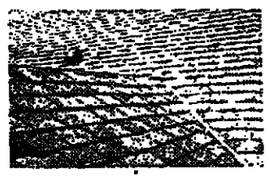
GRAND OPENING: June 25, 26, 27—11 a.m.-6 p.m. Open subsequent weekends, except July 4 weekend.

DIRECTIONS: Take Exit 63 from L.I. Expressway and drive north on North Ocean Avenue. Turn right at Canal Road, and drive 1 mile to Coram-Mt. Sinai Road. Turn right, following the directional signs.

See how these 14 energy-saving features incorporated into "Centenergy '76" can help you save up to 50% on yearly home energy costs.

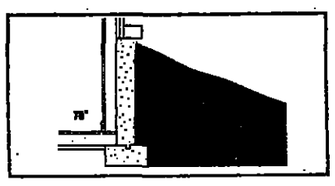
1 Orientation to the Sun
Proper positioning of the home on the building lot helps to take advantage of the energy-plus factors nature provides.





8 Warm Tone Shingles
These shingles do not attract high degrees of heat. Their thermoplastic sealing agent is activated by the sun to form a "one-piece" wind resistant roof.

2 Earth Berms
Earthen insulators around the foundation help to control indoor temperatures year-round.

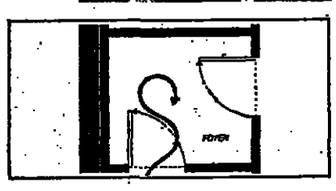


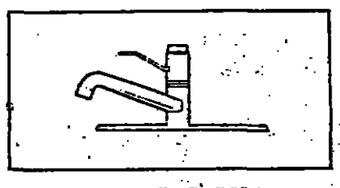
9 Atrium Greenhouse
This covered open court in the center of the house acts as a solar collector and utilizes louvers to control and direct sunlight into rooms.

3 Insulation
New methods of insulation for walls and ceiling will substantially reduce heating and cooling costs.

10 Electric Heat Pump
This pump unit contains both indoor and outdoor coils within the same cabinet, and for every penny's worth of electricity used to operate it, produces more than one penny's worth of heat.

4 Enclosed Foyer
An enclosed foyer at the main entryway helps to shield the home from adverse temperatures, which contribute to energy loss.





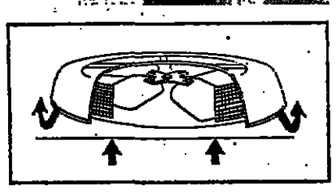
11 Energy Saving Appliances
By using fixtures and appliances with built-in electricity and water saving features, we add still further to our energy conserving efforts.

5 Thermal-Break Window
These specially designed windows are properly positioned and act as both thermal and noise insulators, as well as solar collectors.

12 Hot Water Solar Collector
Heating costs for hot water can be minimized by this unit, which uses the power of the sun to generate heat.

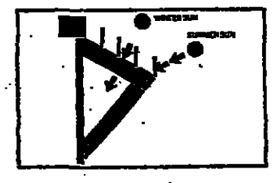
6 Mechanical Power Exhaust
Thermostatically controlled, roof-mounted, ventilator fans reduce the heat load on the home air-conditioning units.

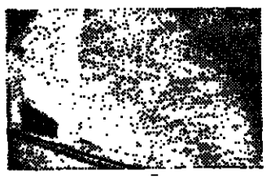
Temperature Zone Control
Heating or cooling energy is saved by regulating temperatures in individual sections of the home.



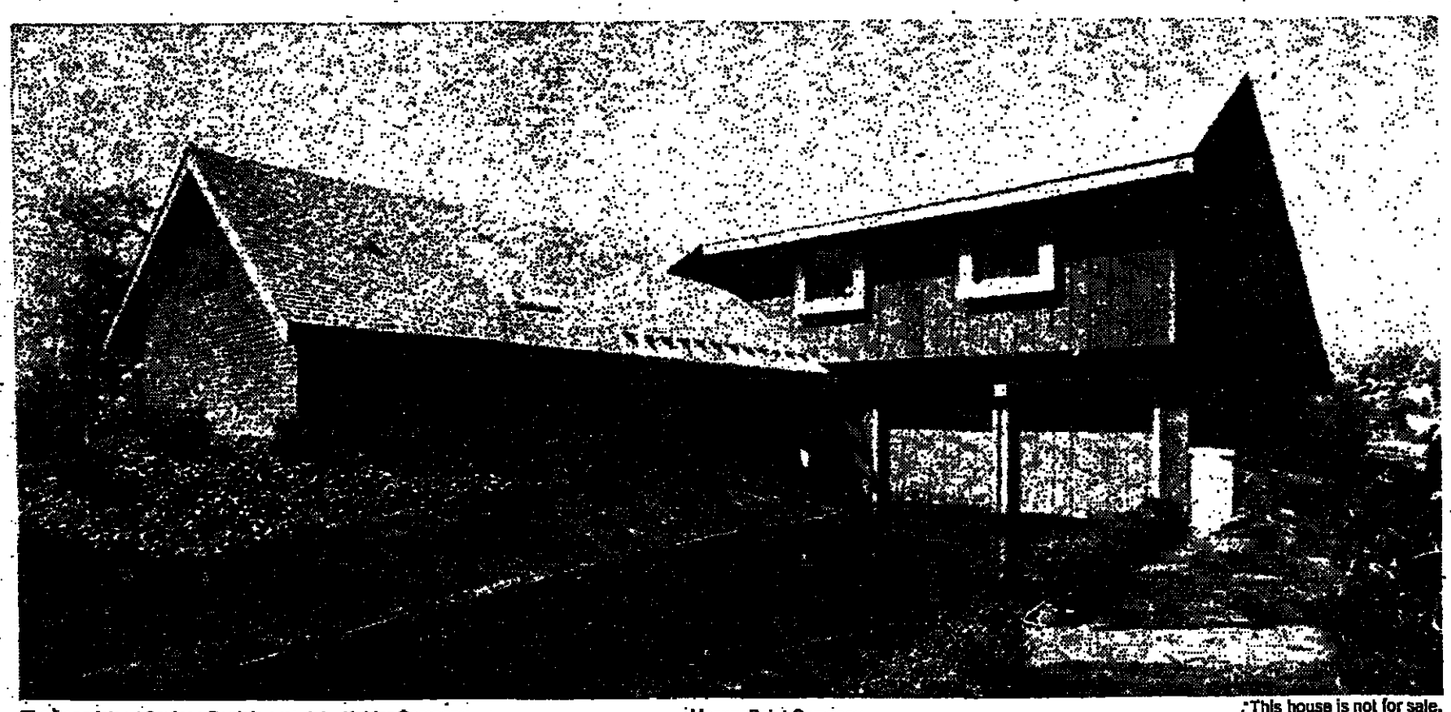
13 Fireplace Efficiency
The specially constructed fireplaces used in the house are designed to reverse the negative energy characteristics of regular fireplaces and make more efficient use of the generated heat.

7 Trellises
Fixed wood trellises are properly positioned and help to control temperatures in winter and summer.





14 Sloped Ceilings
These aesthetically designed ceilings carry heat to the second floor galleries and act as an effective "heat purge" for summer cooling.



*This house is not for sale.

RHODESIA REBELS BAR CONCESSIONS

Guarantees for Whites Are Out, They Tell Americans

Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, July 8—Rhodesian guerrilla leaders in Mozambique have told a visiting member of the United States Congress that they will reject any proposals for a negotiated settlement of the Rhodesian conflict that do not provide for an immediate and unconditional transfer of power by the ruling white minority.

Representative Stephen J. Solarz, a Brooklyn Democrat, reported today that the guerrilla leaders had rejected a two-year transitional period between white and black rule and ruled out guarantees for white settlers who choose to remain under a black government.

The guerrilla leaders also rejected the possibility of enlisting the assistance of Cuban or other foreign troops, declaring that "if we cannot liberate ourselves, we do not deserve to be liberated," Mr. Solarz said.

If confirmed, the guerrilla leaders' position would complicate attempts by the United States and South Africa to persuade Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia to accept a settlement leading to black rule. As elaborated by United States officials, the atempts have assumed that transitional arrangements and guarantees would be essential elements in a settlement.

Leaders of Guerrillas

Mr. Solarz returned to Johannesburg last night from Mozambique, where he met yesterday with Robert Mugabe, secretary general of the Zimbabwe African National Union, and Edgar Tekeri, a member of the union's Central Committee. The two men said their organization was in control of guerrilla operations.

Mr. Solarz's two-hour discussion with the guerrilla leaders, in the coastal city of Quelimane, offered a rare insight into the thinking of the militant wing of the African National Congress, the umbrella body formed under pressure from black African states seeking to unite the faction-ridden Rhodesian nationaists.

The discussions, in a hotel overlooking the Indian Ocean, were attended by Johnnie Carson, an American diplomat stationed in Maputo, the Mozambique capital.

No Sharing of Power

When they asked the guerrilla leaders about guarantees for Rhodesia's 270,000 whites, the Americans were told that prior commitment was out of the question. Mr. Solarz said Mr. Mugabe had specifically ruled out any formal power-sharing agreements, and also rejected any compensation for the takeover of white-owned land.

According to notes taken by the Representative, Mr. Mugabe said compensating whites for land was out because it was "God-given" and because it had been worked by Africans, who could place counterclaims for exploitation.

Mr. Mugabe was said to have added that whites who remained under a black government would "have to take their position in the queue with everyone else." There would be no move to drive them out, but those guilty of exploitation or treason would "have to answer for past actions."

Christian militiamen reportedly were attacking in the Enfeh area.

FIGHTING UNCLEAR IN NORTH LEBANON

Both the Right and Left Report New Victories

BEIRUT, Lebanon, July 8 (AP)—Both sides claimed victories today in continued heavy fighting in northern Lebanon, but there were indications that the Lebanese leftists and their Palestinian allies remained on the defensive.

A Western reporter in the north said Christian militiamen were attacking the leftist town of Enfeh, 10 miles south of Tripoli.

Christian sources said they were determined to take the town to insure the defense of Chekka, two miles to the south. Chekka commands a bay that the informants said would be the best site for a port if Lebanon was partitioned and a separate Christian state was set up.

Striking earlier this week from the north, predominantly Moslem leftist militiamen and Palestinian guerrillas invaded an 800-square-mile area of Christian territory between Tripoli and Beirut in an attempt to force an end to the Christian siege of a Palestinian camp here. The attackers penetrated about 20 miles into Christian territory and stormed Chekka, but a Christian counterattack forced them back.

Battle for Camp Goes On

The new front appeared to have little effect on the battle for the Palestinian camp of Tell Zaatar in southeastern Beirut, now in its 17th day. The camp's defenders, estimated to number 500 to 1,000 and packed into a small central area, continued to resist attacks by Christian militiamen.

Christians in the north said they were making new gains in their counterattacks, but the joint command of the Lebanese leftists and Palestinians said towns in the area were changing hands frequently during the fighting. A spokesman said the joint forces would have achieved their objective in the north in two days "except for the Syrian intervention."

He charged that Syrian tanks were shelling the northern and southern edges of Tripoli, which is 60 miles north of Beirut, in an attempt to prevent reinforcements from moving south. Syria denied the charge.

Both sides accused each other of massacres of civilians during the northern fighting, but a Western reporter there said that he could find no evidence of this.

As the fighting continued, an Arab League representative, Dr. Hassan Sabry el-Kholy, met with right-wing Christian leaders in a continued attempt to find some avenue to a truce in the 16-month civil war, according to a Christian broadcast. There were reports afterward, however, that the Arab League mediation efforts were suspended until after a ministerial meeting of member countries in Cairo on Monday.

Syria Explains Stand

DAMASCUS, Syria, July 8 (AP)—The Syrian Government issued a statement today denying that its expeditionary force in Lebanon was fighting on the side of the Christians.

The statement added, however, that Syria would support the Palestinians in their struggle against Israel but not when they interfered in the national affairs of Lebanon.

U.S. NATO Forces Called Unpr

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8—A General Accounting Office investigation has established that the readiness of United States Army armored units in Western Europe is "woefully deficient," Senator Hubert H. Humphrey said today.

The Minnesota Democrat made the statement in making public a digest of a classified report by the G.A.O. on the readiness of frontline armored units stationed in West Germany.

The G.A.O., the investigative arm of Congress, found that the units suffered personnel shortages, ammunition supply problems and deficiencies in their equipment. Despite these shortcomings, the report said, the units "continued to report that they were substantially ready with minor deficiences."

Part of the problem, the digest of the report suggested, is that army standards for computing and reporting on readiness "have been relaxed to the point where units could almost always be reported as combat-ready."

The office, which undertook its investigation at the request of Senator Humphrey, found that because of serious personnel shortages, particularly among skilled enlisted men, not all of the armored vehicles were fully manned.

Without giving specific figures, the digest said that many of the vehicles were not combat-ready, largely because of problems with their radio equipment.

Among the ammunition problems cited in the report were lack of adequate storage areas, insufficient information on serviceable ammunition, inadequate access roads to stockpiles, not enough tools to cut the banding around ammunition boxes and a lack of conveyors to expedite loading.

In one instance, Senator Humphrey said, drawing from the classified portion of the report, a unit of the First Armored Division did not have a set of keys to the ammunition bunkers and would have to travel about an hour to obtain one.

'Serious Mismanagement'

"There is, in my judgment," Senator Humphrey said, "serious mismanagement and inefficiency in our European forces and in the program that is supposed to assure the combat-readiness of those forces.

"It should be emphasized that these problems are the result of management inadequacies within the army. They have not been caused by inadequate support from Congress or the taxpayer."

Exiles in Argentina Struggle to

By JUAN de ONIS
Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, July 8—Latin-American political refugees in Argentina, who feel trapped, afraid and frustrated, are mounting almost desperate acts of pressure on the United Nations and foreign embassies to help them leave the country.

A group of 44 Chilean and Uruguayan exiles, including 24 children, began a hunger strike yesterday at the shabby residential hotel where some have been waiting for two years to obtain visas to a new country.

"We can't stay here," said a Chilean refugee at the Chelita Hotel. "We have no documents to even walk the streets and we can't work legally. Some of our children have been told they can no longer go to school. We have to get out."

Asking not to be identified, as did the other refugees, he said he came here a year and eight months ago from a working-class sector of San Bernardo, near the Chilean capital, where he said he had been active in the Socialist Party's organization of neighborhood committees.

"After the military overthrew President Allende, the pressure got so bad we had to leave," he continued. "Some people were killed and many went to jail. I went to the Church Committee for Peace and they got us permission to leave."

With his wife and two children, he came to Argentina, like at least 10,000 other Chileans after the fall of the left-wing Government of President Salvador Allende Gossens.

Along with refugees from Bolivia, Uruguay and Brazil, the Chileans make up the majority of the approximately 8,500 registered with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees here. Other thousands of people who came here for political or economic reasons are illegal residents in Argentina.

The group that began the hunger strike said that other refugees in the 18 hotels and shelters maintained by the United Nations would join the movement next week unless there was some movement to accelerate exit visas from embassies here or the issuance of Argentine documents for those who wanted to stay.

Another group of 27 Chileans has been in the Canadian Embassy since last Friday. They have refused to leave the embassy offices until the Canadian Government says it will give them visas.

Armed Men Beat Chileans

The pressure from the refugees on the office of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees here has increased since armed men dragged 25 Chileans from two hotels and beat them up. They were later released and said their abductors had been policemen or military personnel.

Rear Adm. Cesar Augusto Guzzetti, the Foreign Minister of the military junta, said the protest movements by the refugees were "a demand for action from the

RUMANIA ASKS BLOC TO AID POOR STATES

EAST BERLIN, July 8 (Reuters)—Rumania called today for special benefits for the poorest countries of the Soviet bloc.

Prime Minister Manea Manescu made the call here on the second day of a three-day meeting of Comecon, the Communist economic alliance.

Mr. Manescu, whose country's per capita income is among the lowest in the Soviet bloc, said Comecon's most backward members should be given help to catch up through a new 15-year or 20-year program to wipe out gaps in development and living standards.

Comecon's full members are all the East European countries except Yugoslavia as well as Cuba and Mongolia.

Up to now, only Cuba and Mongolia have been granted special developing status. Rumania and Bulgaria are the least-developed members in Eastern Europe, while East Germany and Czechslovakia are the economic leaders.

Earlier in the meeting, Hungary urged reforms to make Comecon more flexible and to speed its decisions.

AN ALGIERS PRELATE IS SLAIN ON STREET

ALGIERS, July 8 (AP)—Auxiliary Bishop Gaston Marie Jacquier of Algiers was assassinated today, the Roman Catholic diocesan office announced.

Official sources said that the killing occurred shortly after midday as Monsignor Jacquier, 72 years old, was walking in downtown Algiers.

Witnesses reported that a man had approached the monsignor, struck him several times with a knife and fled. Monsignor Jacquier was taken to the city's main hospital, where he died half an hour later.

The police set up checkpoints and searched the city for the killer.

President Houari Boumediene sent his personal condolences to Leon-Etienne Cardinal Duval, Archbishop of Algiers.

Monsignor Jacquier was born in France but spent most his life in Algeria. He was ordained in Algiers in 1926 and was appointed chancellor of the diocese in 1936 and auxiliary bishop in 1960.

HARTFORD, (AP)—The State Gaming Commission said that more than $5 million was wagered legally in Connecticut durin gthe Fourth of July weekend. The commission said that from Friday through Monday nearly 75,000 bettors at the Bridgeport and Hartford jai alai frontons and the Plainfield dog track bet a total of $4.6 million. The state's 11 offtrack betting offices handled $795,000 in bets.

of the Arab League countries and the Palestine Liberation Organization, which has voting rights in league sessions. The meeting ended with a call for a cease-fire, and the mission charged with supervising measures for carrying it out. But no truce has resulted.

Since the meeting of July 1, Sudanese and Saudi Arabian peacekeeping troops have been sent to the Beirut area overland from Syria to join Libyan and Syrian contingents. The Libyan and Syrian peacekeeping troops were originally reported to total 1,000 men, and the Sudanese and Saudi contingents were said to have raised this total to 2,300.

But Arab sources here said today that the force actually numbered fewer than 1,500 men. They said also that the Saudi Government had sent a total of 300 soldiers for the force and had informed the league that it would airlift a small contingent of Somali troops to help in the peacekeeping.

Meanwhile, the Cairo newspaper Al Ahram called on the Arab League today to look into another Arab problem, a charge by the Sudan that Libya backed a coup attempt against the Government of President Gaafar al-Nimeiry last week. The coup attempt was put down in heavy fighting.

Egypt has declared strong support for the Sudanese Government and today Egypt's Vice-President, Hosny Mubarak, announced that the two neighboring nations had entered into a military "coordination and cooperation" agreement.

The Arab League mediation mission had attempted to arrange a meeting between the two sides in the Lebanese civil war earlier this week at the town of Sofar, east of Beirut, but the Arab sources noted that continued heavy fighting had made the session impossible.

What the league might try to do next is unclear. However, Dr. Hassan Sabry el-Kholy, an Egyptian who has been conducting separate talks with leaders of the factions, is to stay on in Lebanon or in Syria as Mr. Riad's representative.

Mexico's Elections Emphasize Nation's Political Stability

MEXICO CITY—The Paseo de la Reforma for months has been a collage of handbills, banners and placards; television and radio stations have carried numerous programs on political awareness and participation.

But the means justified the end Sunday, July Fourth—a substantial majority of Mexico's 26 million registered voters—elected a new president.

Compared to the wild 4th of July festivities in the U.S., it was a quiet Sunday in Mexico. Weekend trips and activities were cut short or even cancelled in this macro-city of nearly 14 million people, in the large cities, in the states and the smallest of towns of the 2,300 municipalities that make up this dynamic 758,000 square mile country.

The activity was the presidential election. In addition the voters cast their ballots to choose 194 federal representatives (diputados) and 64 federal senators, two from each state.

Candidate Jose Lopez Portillo (daughter and wife at right) line up to vote in July 4th Mexican presidential elections.

FULL SLATE

Unlike the U.S. where Congressional members' terms are staggered, Mexican voters elected a full slate of candidates to fill all the seats of the two houses that comprise the Congress of the Union.

In the climate of political stability that has characterized Mexico's public life in recent decades, millions of men and women aged 18 and over lined up at the 43,358 polling places throughout the nation to elect 56-year-old lawyer-economist Jose Lopez Portillo president for a six-year term starting December 1.

The greater maturity of the citizenry, as well as an intense desire to be part of the political process, made it possible to register the largest number of voters in the country's history.

As of May 31, the National Voter Registry had registered approximately 26 million people out of a total of almost 29 million Mexicans eligible to vote. The Federal Elections Commission, comprised of representatives from all political parties and the Executive and Legislative Branches of government, was responsible for preparing and monitoring the electoral process.

The verification of registration lists was more vigorously applied this election and more vigorous methods have been initiated during the past six years of President Luis Echeverria's administration.

PARTICIPATION

While the final vote count remains to be seen, voter apathy was certainly not apparent in registering the voters as the total came to 25,913,215—95 percent of the citizens with the right to vote.

Voter participation in Mexico seems to increase with each election. Political analysts expect a considerable increase over the election figures of three and six years ago.

Although the opposition party did not enter a presidential candidate because of its inability to decide on one. A heavy turnout was reported, mostly in response to Lopez Portillo's gruelling nationwide tour of cities and small towns where he asked voters to turn out and show approval of the mandates that he wishes to set forth for the nation.

SUPERVISION

The polling places, where handwritten ballots were cast, were open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. under the supervision of representatives from the competing parties, whose activities are incorporated into the election process and authorized by the Federal Elections Law.

Lines of voters waiting to cast their ballots grew long during the day as church services and the "comida", the main meal of the day, were completed.

Voter turnout was equally heavy in all social strata throughout Mexico.

No Mexican was in doubt about the results of the election however. Even with the inability of the opposition party to put forth a presidential candidate, the campaign of Lopez Portillo and the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) had generated the support of large numbers of citizens.

The citizenry had sensed the sincerity of Lopez Portillo and his ideas, which were expressed with extraordinary frankness, especially in his analysis of the problems Mexico faces. Perhaps this grew out of the fact that this is Lopez Portillo's first elective job.

DYNAMIC LEADERSHIP

Echeverria has been said to have left the opposition of both extremes without a slogan or cause during his six-year term. His has been a dynamic and self-critical presidency. Perhaps the most productive of any previous Mexican president.

Lopez Portillo, despite the exhausting pace of his long campaign, seems to have convinced his fellow Mexicans of the necessity of continuing with, improving upon, and bringing fully into reality a model for development consistent with the needs of the country in order to move steadily forward toward a vast future, as the most outstanding Mexican and foreign observers have indicated.

The other parties had no constructive solutions to offer, and Portillo received neither formal nor substantial opposition from them. The working platform he put forth at the close of his campaign seems to remain valid.

Lopez Portillo's position has been strengthened by his identification with the aspirations of his people and he is, therefore, assured of being at the top in the public's awareness and the collective will.

The platform of Lopez Portillo does not seem to have been produced in a vacuum of public apathy. As the very high percentage of voter registration seems to have showed, the people moved forward for six years with Echeverria in the practice of democratic participation, demands, frank criticism, and political dialogue all generated changes.

MULTI-PARTY SYSTEM

Lopez Portillo's platform was formulated within the context of an active multi-party system, established by the Mexican Constitution, both respected and encouraged by the government itself.

During his administration, Echeverria implemented political reform that strengthened the multi-party system. The Constitution was amended to lower the age of eligibility from 25 to 21 for Representatives, and from 35 to 30 for Senators.

Article 54 was amended to increase the participation and representation of minorities. Under Mexico's complicated representation system, opposition parties are awarded special "congressmen at large" seats, on the basis of five seats for one and one-half percent of the total vote, plus one more seat for every one-half of one percent, up to a maximum of 25.

In the outgoing lower house, the PRI held 189 seats, PAN 25, the Popular Socialist Party 10 and the Mexican Authentic Revolutionary Party six.

ELECTION REFORM

The maximum of 25 minority seats has been raised from 20 during Echeverria's administration. The reform was an attempt to provide better representation for minority political trends.

A new Federal Elections Law established the regulations for these reforms. It lowered the number of members required for the registration of political parties, gave all political parties the right to form part of election organizations and gave them franking privileges for postal and telegraph services. Parties were also given free time and production costs for radio and television to reach the public with their programs.

Due to these reforms, several states have updated their election laws, and the party representative system was adopted in 14 of Mexico's 32 states.

Registered political parties and even non registered parties such as the Mexican Communist Party and the newly created Feminist Party of Mexico, which do not meet minimum membership requirements for registration, were able to campaign, dissent and communicate their ideas without restrictions of any kind.

While it is a fact that Lopez Portillo is Mexico's president-elect, the numerical outcome will still have to be tallied to determine the congressional races. There were two things about this patriotic Sunday that did stand out:

. . . The elections were carried out peacefully, without incidents of violence or unfairness.

. . . More Mexicans than ever before participated in the elections as officials and voters.

These seem to be a reflection and confirmation of the country's political stability and the growing maturity of its population.

STABLE DEMOCRCY

Political and electoral factors are not the only indications of Mexican stability. The strong and promising economic situation is also, to a great degree, indicative of this stability.

This does not mean that the problems of shortages, marginalization and imbalance have been solved, but the structural bases of the ecohomic system that make equitable future growth possible have been strengthened.

Marked inequality still exists, and the existence of a viable middle class can only be found in the larger cities where there is more of a distribution of income and economic development.

PROBLEMS TACKLED

Mexico has many problems which remain to be solved, especially in the area of age-old shortages, that must be overcome. There is the existence of depressed regions which must be brought into the national development in order to achieve equality.

The policies and efforts of Echeverria have been directed toward solving some of these problems, with some major results.

Some of his administration's achievements were:

. . . Two and a half million acres of land have been brought under irrigation, twice as much as had been brought under irrigation in the previous twelve years, and an increase of one-third over the irrigated lands existing in 1970.

. . . This year oil production rose to one million barrels of crude oil per day. PEMEX, the de-centralized government oil company, is producing approximately 700 thousand barrels daily. By the end of 1976, PEMEX will pay nearly 800 million dollars in taxes.

. . . Capacity for generating electrical energy has been doubled since 1970, and will increase by an additional six million kilowatts at the end of 1976.

. . . By the end of Echeverria's administration, basic iron and steel production capacity will have been doubled, and will be more than six billion 200 million tons.

. . . The highway network will extend more than 200 thousand kilometers, more than twice the 1970 figure.

The supply of basic foodstuffs was assured and selfsufficiency was recovered for such products as oil, wheat, rice and beans. The shortage of corn, a staple item, was significantly reduced.

INDUSTRIES GROW

. . . Many mechanisms were created to encourage the formation of enterprises, grant credit to them, protect their development and stimulate their growth. These measures include numerous tax incentives, large amounts of credit for the establishment or extension of industries, access to new technology and promotion of regional development. A strong legal framework was also established which guarantees the development of private enterprise and ready access to the country's highest authorities for business leaders.

. . . The following growth rates were achieved in the last five years in the industrial sector: mining, 3.6 percent; petroleum, 8.6 percent; basic petrochemicals, 14.5 percent; manufacturing, 6.6 percent; construction, 9.9 percent; and electricity, 9.3 percent.

. . . The most significant growth within the manufacturing industry took place in the manufacture of synthetic threads and fabrics, their production, and trucks. Important increases were achieved in the production of automobiles, fertilizers, tires and innertubes, among other products.

. . . In 1975, the value of production in the mining industry was 1.2 billion dollars, double the amount in 1970.

. . . In 1970, approximately 240 million dollars of rural credit was granted. In 1976 this figure has risen to 2.1 billion dollars.

. . .This year investment in the promotion of agriculture and livestock, and rural development will reach the figure of 1.6 billion dollars, an increase of more than 500 percent over investment in 1971.

Compared to Mexican presidents in the past, these achievements show an unprecedented effort by the Echeverria administration. He and his associates and the best informed analysts of his administration agree that many of the measures taken in these years will give greater and more abundant results in the future. They believe that they have laid a firm foundation for Lopez Portillo and other future presidents.

The two greatest problems that Lopez Portillo and the subsequent administrations will have to face are food supplies and unemployment.

EMPLOYMENT

Projections are currently put at trying to generate 800 thousand jobs annually. Feeding the growing number of Mexicans—there are now approximately 63 million with a birth rate of 3.5 percent—make a national effort necessary.

One adviser to the president recently emphasized that the nation's efforts will have two points of convergence reducing unemployment and changing, as much as possible, the patterns of income distribution.

CHALLENGES AHEAD

Enormous challenges lie behind the elections in which Mexicans participated on Sunday, July fourth. They are challenges which the president-elect must face this coming December 1.

To face this challenge effectively, the future president, Lopez Portillo, has the support of a people convinced that the Mexican Revolution has not ended.

As Lopez Portillo himself has said, the nation's principles and institutions can always be perfected. With one six-year term ahead of him, Portillo and Mexico will try to forget its desitny.

NEW MARS AREA WILL BE SCANNED

Viking Orbit to Be Altered to Take Photographs

PASADENA, Calif., July 8 (UPI)—Scientists made plans today to adjust the cours of the Viking 1 spacecraft orbiting Mars to photograph a new and safe site for its landing capsule.

The tentative new target area for the lander was west of the originally selected site on the Martian Chryse plain.

The course maneuver would move the spacecraft to the west for a landing about 8 A.M. Tuesday, July 20.

Photographs to be taken in the next few days will show the scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory whether the area is flat enough for a landing. Radar sightings to determine whether there are any obstacles, such as boulders, will also be viewed.

"We understand a lot about the Chryse area," said James Martin, Viking project manager. "We believe we have a very good chance of finding what we are looking for. If not, we will return to the northwest area and land there."

A decision will be made July 14 after compilation of photographs sent back by the spacecraft's television.

In case still another site must be selected, the landing would be July 22 about 9:30 A.M. E.D.T.

Scientists first aimed at a Fourth of July landing to coincide with the Bicentennial celebration, but the area selected was too rough and the first of the series of postponements was called.

If the lander does not have a relatively flat surface free of obstructions, it could be damaged beyond repair when it reaches the Martian surface.

Vietnam Aids Palestinians

HANOI, Vietnam, July 8 (Agence France-Presse)—Vietnam has handed over a gift of medical and food supplies to the Palestinians, according to press reports here. At the same time, it was learned that Prime Minister Pham Van Dong met yesterday with the Hanoi representative of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, Ali Fayad, to discuss the situation in Lebanon.

Soviet Astronauts 'Feel Fine' And Begin Space Experiments

MOSCOW, July 8 (UPI)—Two Soviet astronauts began scientific experiments aboard the Salyut 5 space station today and said that the orbiting laboratory, which might be their home in space for months, was comfortable.

After their first night aboard the orbiting Salyut, the Flight Commander, Col. Boris Volynov, and Lieut. Col. Vitaly Zholobov, the engineer, radioed they "feel fine."

The two men, who docked their Soyuz 21 spacecraft with the station yesterday 25 hours after they were rocketed into 150-mile-high orbit, measured their pulse rates and collected other medical data as their first tasks aboard the three-room, 20-ton laboratory.

Colonel Volynov reported that they were adjusting to the weightlessness of space and so far had felt no ill effects.

"Our friends at control say there have been no significant physical changes," he said, "but we are watching one another carefully."

He showed television viewers the laboratory's controls and several other pieces of equipment. Sunlight streamed into the cabin through a porthole behind the two.

The Tass press agency said in a report from the Soviet flight control center—its location was not disclosed—that Colonels Volynov and Zholobov had switched on scientific apparatus "strictly according to the schedule."

Tass said that the astronauts would study the earth's surface and atmosphere, examine outer space and perform medical tests on the effects of weightlessness on man.

Soviet officials have not disclosed the length of the flight, but the complicated nature of the experiments suggests the two men may stay aloft for an extended period.

Tass said earlier that Soyuz was circling the globe every 89.6 minutes in an elliptical orbit ranging from 168 miles to 152 miles above earth.

In an analysis of yesterday's docking, Gen. Vladimir Shatalov, head of astronaut training, said that the mission had been designed to use a minimum of fuel between blastoff and linkup.

F.D.A. PROPOSES BAN ON USE OF CHEMICAL

WASHINGTON, July 8 (UPI)—The Food and Drug Administration will propose a ban on a chemical formerly used in some decaffeinated coffees, and possibly in some beers, on grounds that it could cause cancer.

The chemical is trichloroethlyene, or TCE, which has been found by researchers to cause liver cancer in mice.

Last year, General Foods stopped using TCE in the manufacture of Brim and Sanka decaffeinated coffees after the National Cancer Institute issued its alert on the experiments on mice.

The F.D.A. says that it will propose banning the chemical in foods as soon as an order can be drafted, and that "orders proposing to ban TCE in drugs and cosmetics will follow."

TCE was formerly used to help remove caffeine from coffee, but the agency said it knew of no manufacturer still using it for that purpose. The coffee producers switched to methylene chloride, another chemical of the same family, use of which the F.D.A. permits pending further studies.

The ban would also apply to spice oils and to "modified hop extract for beer production," although Government experts said that they did not know whether any brewer actually was using TCE.

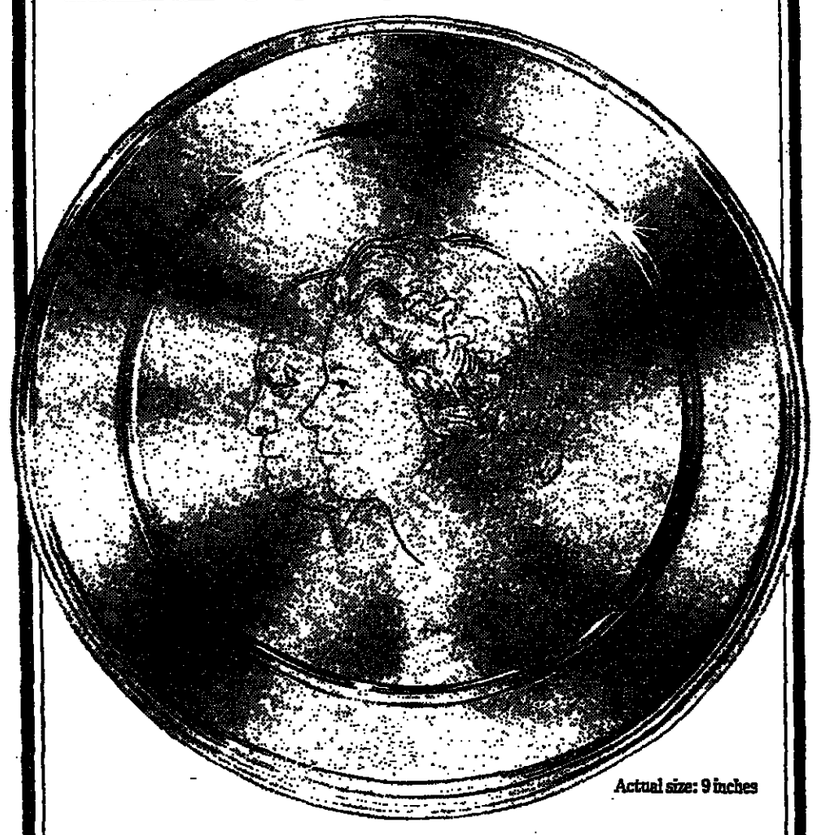
THE BICENTENNIAL HEADS OF STATE PLATE



Actual size: 9 inches

Commemorating a Unique Occasion

The Queen of England and the President of the United States meet to celebrate America's 200th anniversary. The world's oldest monarchy and the world's longest-lived republic—stand together to lead the English-speaking world.

The Queen's special visit to Washington is fittingly commemorated by a unique collector's item: the Sterling Silver Bicentennial Heads of State Plate.

A Strictly Limited Edition in Enduring Silver

To honor this historic meeting, the Royal artist and sculptor Annigoni has chosen the medium of Sterling Silver, one of the most beautiful and enduring of all precious metals. His movingly simple design will be issued by the Library of Imperial History in a single, serially numbered edition limited strictly to 1,976—the exact number of America's Bicentennial year.

A Family Possession for the Generations

This enduring memento of an historic occasion will have great interest and significance. Its assured rarity and historic importance will recommend it to the knowledgeable collector. And those who cherish the ownership of a family treasure will appreciate one whose beauty will endure—and whose intrinsic value tends, historically, to increase.

Signed, Numbered and Authenticated

Each of the 1,976 plates issued, measuring 9 inches in diameter, bears the artist's signature, the hallmark of the London Assay Office, and an individual serial number. Each will be delivered in a handsome presentation case, accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity bearing the subscriber's name.

To assure possession of this extremely limited edition, you are urged to mail your application and remittance without delay.

The New York Times/Jane E. Brody

Sludge truck starts to release its 2,500 gallon load of nutrient-laden sewage residue on a farm in Janesville, Wis., which next year will grow corn. On-land sludge disposal is economical, avoids pollution and recycles valuable nutrients for fertilizing crops.

years ago, following completion of the new secondary treatment plant, the city decided to find out what troubles it may be borrowing by this economical method of waste disposal.

So the city council set aside $36,000 and asked University of Wisconsin soil scientists to conduct a three-year study. The study, done under the direction of Dr. Arthur Peterson, was aided later by Wisconsin's Department of Natural Resources and resulted ultimately in statewide guidelines for safe on-land sludge application in the heart of America's dairyland.

A Familiar Problem

The sludge problem is familiar to cities everywhere. In New York, after primary sewage treatment, the sludge is dumped 12 miles out in the ocean. Beaches in the area were closed last month when sludge and other wastes washed ashore and created an unsightly mess and a potential health threat.

In many cities that cannot use the ocean as a dumping grounds, sludge is used as landfill [Dr. Peterson calls this "burying a vital resource"), although economically accessible fill sites are fast disappearing. Other more costly disposal methods include drying the sludge by heat-treating it. Milwaukee pioneered in selling dried sludge (under the trade name Milorganite) as a soil conditioner and fertilizer.

Some cities incinerate the dried sludge, which, Dr. Peterson pointed out, "creates air pollution and uses energy to burn up the nitrogen we need to grow our corn crop."

According to Mr. Kessler, applying liquid sludge to the land is, in addition to recycling valuable resources, "the cheapest sludge disposal method available—the next cheapest costs three to five times more."

Coating of Liquid

The closer the disposal site is to the sewage plant, the more economical the method becomes. However, Dr. Peterson said, although Janesville transports sludge only a few miles from the plant, South Milwaukee finds it economical to haul liquid sludge to farms 60 miles away.

During the visit, the sludge truck, its tank full, lumbered onto the field, and in two and a half minutes left a coating of sludge three-eighths of an inch deep over an eight-foot strip of land. A similar coating spread two hours earlier had already dried into a paper-thin, faintly odorous solid that crumbled on touch into black "soil."

As the liquid splashed out the rear of the truck, a somewhat pungent odor tinged with ammonia and hydrogen sulfide (the "rotten egg" smell) wafted into the still air.

Next spring Janesville will move its sludge disposal to another plot of city-owned land and this year's plot will begin a two-year crop rotation of corn and winter rye. The third year, when the sludge nutrients are exhausted the land will be back to sludge disposal, Mr. Kessler explained. The sludge-treated land is worked and the crops planted, harvested and sold by tenant farmers at no cost to the city.

Janesville's sludge is the result of bacterial digestion of whatever organic solids settle out in primary and secondary sewage treatment tanks. The methane gas formed by the bacterial action is used for heating and to generate electricity. The digested sludge is about 97 percent water and 3 percent dry solids.

In addition to desirable nutrients, the sludge contains some "bad actors"—heavy metals like chromium and nickel that could accumulate to levels toxic to plants, and elements like arsenic, mercury and cadmium that are potentially toxic to man and animals.

Most of Janesville's big industries do not produce sewage heavily laden with toxic chemicals, Mr. Kessler said, although two weeks ago a company dumped without warning an as yet unidentified chemical so poisonous that even at very low concentrations in the sludge it instantly killed all vegetation it touched.

An analysis of sludge in 30 cities around the state showed, Dr. Peterson said, that "you could almost tell the industries of a city simply by looking at the chemicals in its sludge."

The university research, done with Dennis R. Keeney and Leo M. Walsh, revealed that while the sewage in some communities may contain such high levels of toxic substances that on-land disposal would be hazardous, Janesville could apply up to four and a half inches of sludge every year without building up unsafe levels. The study also showed that the poisonous elements are not taken up by the seed portion of plants, making crops like corn and grain safe to grow on sludge-treated land.

Continuous monitoring is done to check the build-up of toxic substances. "We don't want to exceed acceptable levels," Mr. Kessler said. "We're interested in using the land as long as possible."

Dr. Peterson added that on sludge-treated land it was important to grow crops like corn, oats, rye and bluegrass pasture that are "nitrogen hungry" to prevent a build-up of sludge nitrates that could seep into groundwater.

High Yields of Corn

In the university test plots, the yields of corn on sludge-treated land equaled or exceeded crops grown with commercial fertilizer or plain irrigation water. In the second year, without any additional application of sludge or fertilizer, the yields of corn on the sludge-treated land were highest because additional nitrogen in the sludge was converted to forms available to the plants as a kind of slow-release fertilizer.

When sludge is applied to soil, the Wisconsin researchers found, human fecal organisms it contains die off rapidly, down to 0.02 percent of their original concentration within 12 days of application.

Nevertheless, the state recommends against planting root crops or vegetables that are eaten raw for one year after sludge application, and to avoid feeding pasture grasses or green forage to milk cows for two weeks afterward.

Although Dr. Peterson and Mr. Kessler, among others, say they do not find the odor of sludge offensive or unpleasant, to avoid complaints Dr. Peterson recommends using sites distant from populated areas or injecting the sludge directly into the soil.

"Some people smell with their eyes," he remarked. "They object on principle, even though they've never smelled sludge. During our tests, some people complained about the odor from the control plots that were treated only with plain water."

To prevent runoff and contamination of surface or ground water, he said, sludge should not be applied to land that has a high water table, steep slope, bedrock less than two feet down or very sandy soil.

To Dr. Peterson, an immediate practical use of liquid sludge throughout the country is an annual application each fall to golf courses. But, he added, in most places "we'll need a lot of public education before we can really turn this potential pollutant into a useful resource."

"For the L-rd shall not forsake His people"

(Samuel I Chapter 12)

We of Hineni a movement committed to Torah Judaism . . . join our brethren throughout the world in giving thanks to the Almighty G-d for the great miracle that He has wrought in delivering our people from the throes of captivity in Uganda.

We of Hineni take great pride in paying homage to the valiant soldiers of the Israel Defense Forces whose legendary deeds shall be recorded in the annals of history for all time . . . "They were swifter than eagles, stronger than lions . . . "

We of Hineni call upon every Jew to respond to this awesome moment in history by returning to G-d and the Torah way of life . . . Deep in his soul, every Jew perceives that we are a nation unlike any other nation . . . that we stood at Sinai and made a Covenant with G-d . . . that our very survival is predicated on that Covenant.

We of Hineni call upon every Jew to kindle the spark within his soul — "the pintele Yid", so that we may fulfill our prophetic destiny and become a "light unto the nations . . . a priestly kingdom, a holy people . . . "

We of Hineni call upon those of our sons and daughters who have defected to alien cults — who are lost in the morass of assimilation to discover their own majestic heritage and come home to G-d . . .

We of Hineni call upon all men of faith to participate in this most miraculous moment in 2,000 years of history by supporting and strengthening Israel . . . by proclaiming to all groups and nations that any opposition to Israel's right to her land is opposition to the will of the Almighty Himself . . . for Israel is the Land of the Jewish people, deeded to us as an eternal inheritance by the Almighty G-d as recorded in His holy Bible . . .

We of Hineni call upon all men of faith to proclaim these divine truths so that the light of Israel may illuminate the world and usher in a new day of peace, justice, and brotherhood . . .

Re: Franklin National Bank
NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, PLEASE TAKE NOTICE:

(a) BRADFORD TRUST COMPANY, as Trustee of the Trust created in conjunction with the Employee Pension Plan of Franklin National Bank, FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION in its individual corporate capacity and as Receiver of Franklin National Bank, W. NORMAN DAVIS, CHARLES A. HOLM and ELLEN T. MURPHY have brought an action in this Court, Docket Number 76 C 639, against ALFRED H. SCHMITT, WILLIAM J. LANE, GEORGE J. WRIGHT, RICHARD F. BRZOZOWSKI, BRUCE E. ERICSSON, JOSEPH A. BEISLER, HAROLD A. WEBSTER, JOHN J. TUOHY and FRANK G. WANGEMAN.

(b) The action has been brought: (1) for an order directing distribution of the assets of the trust (the "Trust") created in conjunction with the Employee Pension Plan (the "Plan") of Franklin National Bank ("FNB"), (2) for an order settling the account of the Trustee and (3) for an order discharging plaintiffs from liability as to all matters related to administration of the Trust and distribution of the assets of the Trust as proposed by plaintiffs.

(c) Plaintiffs, DAVIS, HOLM and MURPHY sue in their capacity as members of the committee which is now responsible for administration of the Plan.

(d) Defendants SCHMITT, LANE, WRIGHT, BRZOZOWSKI and ERICSSON are joined as defendants not only because of their individual interests in the Plan and Trust at any time from and including January 1, 1974 to date and in the propriety of any distribution of its assets, but also as representatives of a class consisting of all persons who had any interest in the Plan and Trust during that period (including former employees of Federation Bank & Trust Company).

(e) Defendants BEISLER, WEBSTER, TUOHY and WANGEMAN are joined as defendants in their former capacity as members of the Trust Committee of FNB who performed the duties of the committee under the Plan until October 8, 1974, and who may have an interest in the action. By their answer filed on May 20, 1976, these defendants seek, among other things, an order discharging them from any liability with respect to the Plan.

(f) On April 13, 1976, an answer to the complaint was filed on behalf of defendants SCHMITT, LANE, WRIGHT, BRZOZOWSKI and ERICSSON by their counsel, Meyer, English & Clanckulli, P.C., 160 Mineola Boulevard, Mineola, New York 11501, tel. (516)741-6565.

(g) The present posture of the action is that on June 11, 1976 this Court directed that this action proceed as a class action under the provisions of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as a 23(b) (1) and (2) class action. The Court ruled that defendants SCHMITT, LANE, WRIGHT, BRZOZOWSKI and ERICSSON are the Representative Defendants for the entire class described in paragraph (d) above. The Court also directed that the class be divided into two subclasses:

(1) a subclass represented by defendants SCHMITT, LANE, WRIGHT and BRZOZOWSKI consisting of all members of the class whom plaintiffs allege to be entitled to receive benefits under the Plan; and

(2) a subclass represented by defendant ERICSSON consisting of all members of the class whom plaintiffs allege are not entitled to receive benefits under the Plan because they left the employ of FNB prior to the termination of the Plan on October 8, 1974 and had not qualified for any benefits under the Plan at the time they left.

(h) All members of the class described in paragraph (d) above will be bound by the judgment entered by this Court.

(i) Any member of the class described in paragraph (d) above may intervene and present a claim, or may otherwise come into the action. In accordance with paragraph (j) below, if any member of the class desires, he or she may enter an appearance through counsel of his or her choice. If any member of the class does not intervene or otherwise appear, his or her interest in the action will of necessity be represented by counsel for the Representative Defendants.

(j) Any appearance by a member of the class must be made by filing with the Clerk of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, 225 Cadman Plaza East, Brooklyn, New York 11201, within 30 days after the date of this notice a written document so stating.

(k) The court expresses no opinion as to the merits of this action.

Dated: June 30, 1976

PUBLIC NOTICE

PUBLIC NOTICE

Pursuant to Section 105, of the Housing Act of 1949, as amended and Section 507, subdivision (2) (d) of Article 15 of the General Municipal Law, as amended, notice is hereby given that the City of New York ("City") has a proposal from United Harlem Growth, Inc. ("Redeveloper"), having its principal place of business at 21-43 Adam Clayton Powell Blvd. (Suite 107), New York, New York 10027, to enter into a contract of sale ("Disposition Agreement") on or after July 22, 1976, providing for the sale of certain parcels of City-owned land located in the St. Nicholas Park Urban Renewal Area, which parcels consist of:

Parcel A: Block 1941 Lot 40, Parcel B: Block 1942 Lot 23, Parcel C: Block 1941 Lot 51, Parcel D: Block 1941 Lot 52, Parcel E: Block 1941 Lot 54, all on the map for the County, City and State of New York, known respectively as 208, 215, 242, 244, and 250 West 136th Street (collectively known as the "Disposition Site").

The Redeveloper, upon taking title to the Disposition Site, proposes to proceed to rehabilitate the buildings thereon for housing persons of low and moderate income, in accordance with the St. Nicholas Park Urban Renewal Plan. The Redeveloper is comprised of a group of individuals and families organized under a "sweat equity" concept. After construction is completed, the Redeveloper intends to sell the five buildings to individual members of the group who have fulfilled their work requirements as stipulated in the rules and regulations set up by the organization.

The purchasers shall be approved as to eligibility by the HDA and the Federal Department of Housing and Urban Development ("Agency"). The prices to be paid by the Redeveloper for the Disposit on Site shall be a total of $2,500 ($500 for each parcel), to be paid upon delivery of the deed. Such conveyance shall be by bargain and sale deed, and shall be upon the following terms and conditions:

1. That the Redeveloper commence the rehabilitation within six (6) months after delivery of the deed, and shall complete construction within two (2) years from commencement of the rehabilitation.
2. That the Disposition Site be rehabilitated and developed in accordance with the St. Nicholas Park Urban Renewal Plan, and all of the terms and conditions of the proposed Disposition Agreement.

The Redeveloper has filed with the Housing and Development Administration a "Redeveloper's Statement for Public Disclosure" in the form prescribed by the Federal Department of Housing and Urban Development, which states the name of the Redeveloper and identifies the officers, directors and principal members of the Redeveloper. Both the Redeveloper's Statement for Public Disclosure and the proposed Disposition Agreement will be available for public examination at the office of the Housing and Development Administration, Room 9157, 100 Gold Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, during its regular business hours weekdays from 9:00 am to 5:00 pm, and at the time, date and place of the public hearing hereinafter referred to.

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that a public hearing will be held on the 22nd day of July, 1976 before the Board of Estimate of the City of New York in City Hall, in City Hall Park, in the Borough of Manhattan, at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, to consider authorizing the execution of the proposed Disposition Agreement, at which time all those wishing to be heard will be given the opportunity to be heard on a proposed resolution determining that the proposed sale and the Disposition Agreement are satisfactory and approved; that execution of the Disposition Agreement is authorized; that the sale of the Disposition Site at the prices fixed in the Disposition Agreement, without public auction or sealed bids, is the appropriate method of making the Disposition Site available for redevelopment; that the redeveloper possesses the qualifications and financial resources necessary to acquire and redevelop the Disposition Site in accordance with the Urban Renewal Plan for the St. Nicholas Park Urban Renewal Area; and that the proposed price is satisfactory and not less than the fair value of the Disposition Site for use in accordance with the Urban Renewal Plan.

TEAMSTERS' FUND SAYS INCOME LAGS

I.R.S. Inquiry Tied to Delay in Employer Contributions

By LEE DEMBART
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, July 8—The major pension fund of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters said today that, as a result of action against it by the Internal Revenue Service, employers had held up contributions to the fund and at least one major bank had stopped conducting business on its behalf.

The disclosure came in a four hour interview with the executive director of the fund, Daniel J. Shannon, who said the trustees had agreed last week to allow him to speak to the press.

Mr. Shannon, a certified public accountant, insisted throughout the interview that whatever abuses and questionable activities may have occurred in the past, they had stopped under his stewardship and the fund was improving its loan practices and pension procedures.

The teamster unit—the Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Health and Welfare and Pension Funds—which covers 455,000 workers and retired persons and has assets of $1.4 billion. It is under investigation by the Labor and Justice Departments and by the I.R.S., which last month revoked its tax-exempt status but later modified the effect of its ruling.

Contributions Withheld

Mr. Shannon said that as a result of the original revenue service ruling, which would have made employer contributions to the fund nondeductible, a "substantial amount" of contributions payable this month had been withheld.

Though the fund did not have a cash flow problem as a result, Mr. Shannon said it was not able to invest that money in short-term loans, as it normally would.

After negotiations with the fund's lawyers, the tax agency postponed the effect of its ruling with respect to employers until Aug. 31, and the fund is attempting to have it postponed beyond then.

"The ramifications of that particular act were and are enormous," Mr. Shannon said in his office, which is in a teamster-owned building near O'Hare International Airport. "Some banks have suspended trading on our account."

In April, Mr. Shannon explained, the fund engaged six banks, including the Chemical Bank in New York, to manage securities portfolios totaling $200 million. The Crocker National Bank of San Francisco, which received $30 million, he said, had refused any further activity on the account pending a clarification of the tax status. The other banks are worried, too, he said.

Clearance Awaited

Mr. Shannon said that the Crocker Bank had acted because of regulations in the Investment Company Act of 1940 and that the bank was awaiting a letter from the Securities and Exchange Commission stating that it could conduct business for the fund.

"They don't want to go any farther until that's clarified," he said.

In the interview, Mr. Shannon responded to almost all the questions that were put to him by two reporters, declining to answer only a handful of inquiries or to provide certain documents.

He said that much of what had been reported about the fund in the last year had been inaccurate, but recognized that "the fund had a reputation in the world that was not lily white."

Since March 15, 1975, he said, the fund has made no new loans, though it has given supplemental money to earlier borrowers. The trustees had decided to await clarification of the diversification requirements of the Federal pension law before making new loans, he said.

Mostly Real Estate Loans

"We have to diversify out of real estate," Mr. Shannon said, acknowledging that 67 percent o fthe fund's holdings were in real estate lonas and 6 to 7 percent in property wholly owned by the fund.

These holdings, he said, consisted almost entirely of property acquired by the fund on bad loans, and included some land at Rancho La Costa in California. The La Costa loan, a total of $57-million, is known to be among those under scrutiny ob the two Federal departments.

But, Mr. Shannon insisted with regard to foreclosures, "our experience on that is better than most of the major banks in the country."

He acknowledged that loan moratoriums had been extended for a year or longer, but said that any moratorium granted in the last year "has been for a short term and for very good reasons." The Labor Department is known to be concerned about a large number of loans on which neither interest nor principal has been pand in several years.

Mr. Shannon said deliquent loans on which no moratorium or refinancing had been granted amounted to only $3 million to $3.5 million out of more than $900 million in loans.

Change in Press Policy

To the I.R.S.'s charge that the fund was not being run for the exclusive benefit of the members, Mr. Shannon said, "Most of the things have been alleviated or are being alleviated. I'll be damned if anybody can come into this fund and say that substantial progress is not being made."

In addition to the information that Mr. Shannon provided about the internal workings of the teamsters' largest pension fund, hte real interest of the interview was that it took place at all, considering that up until yesterday the teamsters' public relations attitude had been "tell the press nothing."

Mr. Shannon said that he told the trustees last Thursday at a meeting in Washington, "I'm finished taking the lumps," and that they then approved a new policy of openness. Mr. Shannon hired a public relations director three days ago.

The new policy is evidence that the trustees, who include the teamsters' president, Frank E. Fitzsimmons, are finding themselves under increasing pressure as a result of the government's investigations.

2 F.B.I. Aides Reportedly Under Inquiry

Edward Bennett Williams, Henry E. Petersen and Mitchell Rogovin, who served until May as special counsel to the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mr. Williams is a well-known criminal lawyer, and Mr. Petersen is a former Assistant Attorney General.

One source said that Mr. Kelley had begun an investigation to determine who within the bureau withheld from him until a few months ago knowledge of illegal F.B.I. burglaries carried out within the last five years.

The investigation of those burglaries, which is expected to lead to the indictment of some of those in the bureau who approved them or carried them out, was begun last March after the discovery that the homes of friends, relatives and associates of members of the so-called Weather Underground had been secretly entered and searched in an effort to determine the whereabouts of fugitives.

Broad Findings Expected

One well-placed source said that the burglary investigation, headed by J. Stanley Pottinger, who is in charge of the Justice Department's civil rights division, would uncover a far broader pattern of illegal conduct by agents, including illegal wiretaps, unprovoked assaults, the gratuitous destruction of property and at least one kidnapping.

In addition, the source said, other illegal entries not reflected in bureau files obtained by the Justice Department were carried out against a wide variety of organizations, including Puerto Rican nationalists, the Mafia and some right-wing groups.

In a statement last week, Mr. Kelley said that the newly discovered burglaries had been "limited" in number and confined to a period of several months in 1972 and 1973, in the tenure of L. Patrick Gray 3d, who was acting director of the bureau after its director, J. Edgar Hoover, died in May 1972.

But the F.B.I. source, who asked to remain anonymous, said that such break-ins were committed by the "hundreds" over the last five years in New York City and elsewhere, and that the practice continued until as recently as last April.

Although the civil rights division is understood to have received a number of allegations about other burglaries, its investigation was prompted initially by files, discovered in the bureau's New York field office last March, containing evidence of the surreptitious entries to which Mr. Kelley referred.

Bargaining Under Way

One source said that although it appeared that break-ins aimed at domestic groups had, with a few possible exceptions, been halted in 1966 after Mr. Hoover's written order, they were resumed by bureau agents almost from the moment of his death.

Several officials at F.B.I. headquarters here, including Andrew J. Decker, an assistant director who has retained Mr. Williams as his counsel, and Horace Beckwith, a supervisor in the intelligence division, have retained lawyers who are discussing with Federal prosecutors the possibility of exchanging their testimony for immunity from prosecution, according to sources familiar with the investigation.

That process, one source said, had been slowed somewhat by the necessity of obtaining security clearances for the lawyers involved before they could discuss with their clients the allegations against them.

Although there is no evidence that Mr. Gray possessed knowledge of the burglaries committed in his year-long tenure as acting director of the bureau, some of those close to the investigation believe that the chain of evidence, including written authorizations for "bag jobs," as they are known within the bureau, will ultimately lead to the top of Mr. Gray's intelligence division and very close to the former acting director imself.

Comment Declined

Edward S. Miller, who headed that division in the period under investigation, declined comment today when asked whether he had retained counsel in connection with that case. Some former associates of Mr. Miller, who retired from the bureau in 1974, described him as an enthusiastic pursuer of leftist radicals. They said that he once seriously proposed infiltrating the Democratic Party with agents on the ground that it had been subverted by Communists.

W. Mark Felt, who served as deputy associate F.B.I. director under Mr. Gray, said in a recent interview that he was in charge of the bureau's daily operations in Mr. Gray's tenure but he declined comment when asked whether he knew of the break-ins at the time.

Although those close to the inquiry indicated that some bureau agents or officials would have to face criminal charges regarding the burglaries, no indictments in the case were expected before September.

Justice investigators are attempting to broaden the inquiry by searching for evidence of similar illegal break-ins outside the New York area, especially in San Francisco and Albany, and also by tracing the chain of knowledge and approval upward in the bureau's hierarchy.

The department's investigation of possible financial corruption within the bureau, which is being conducted under the guidance of Michael Shaheen, head of the office of professional responsibility there, is considerably further along than the break-in inquiry and has touched even more of the bureau's important past an present officials, according to the sources familiar with the investigation.

The officials are said to include John P. Mohr, until he retired in 1972 the F.B.I.'s administrative chief and, next to Mr. Hoover, its most powerful and influential official; Nicholas P. Callahan, the associate F.B.I. director who is now Mr. Kelley's most important aide, and Thomas J. Jenkins, one of Mr. Callahan's two deputies.

The only top F.B.I. official likely to remain untouched by the Justice investigations, sources said, is James B. Adams, Mr. Callahan's other deputy.

Mr. Mohr and Mr. Jenkins both declined to comment on the investigation. A secretary to Mr. Callahan said that he was on vacation.

Mr. Callahan, Mr. Jenkins and Mr. Adams have been described by some bureau sources as a "triumvirate" that is loyal to memory of Mr. Hoover and that has retained much control over the bureau's operation. However, Mr. Kelley has rejected suggestions that he is in less than complete charge.

Allegations of Kickbacks

One source said that Mr. Callahan was planning to retire from the bureau later this month. Another official said that his departure had been planned for some time and had no connection with the current investigation.

Mr. Shaheen's investigation concerns allegations of kickbacks to bureau executives from companies that supplied electronic and other equipment to the F.B.I. Investigators in that case have reportedly focused on Ivan W. Conrad, the former head of the F.B.I. laboratory, who has retained Mr. Petersen to represent him.

When asked how many individuals in the bureau had become objects of the kickback investigation, Mr. Shaheen declined to comment.

However, at least 28 bureau agents are known to have been notified by the Justice Department that they are targets of the burglary investigation, and sources said that a number of middle-level bureau officials, such as Mr. Beckwith and Robert Shackelford, head of the bureau's internal security section, also apparently had knowledge of the recent illegal break-ins.

One source explained that those break-ins were directed at "individuals whom the F.B.I. believed might be harboring such fugitives as Mark Rudd, Kathy Boudin and Bernardine Dohrn.

Asked whether Leonard Boudin, a New York City lawyer who is Miss Boudin's father, might have been included on such a list of targets, the source replied, "absolutely."

Since 1963, Mr. Boudin has represented the Socialist Workers Party, and for the last three years had handled that party's civil lawsuit charging the F.B.I. and other Government agencies with unlawful harassment.

New Issue Raised

The possibility of an illegal search directed against him by the bureau is said to raise the issue of an illegal invasion of Mr. Bourdin's relationships with the S.W.P. and other clients.

It was a discovery order obtained in connection with the S.W.P. lawsuit that led last March to the discovery of the burglary files in the bureau's New York City office.

The House Intelligence Committee discovered last year that some electronic equipment purchased by the bureau had been marked up in price by the bureau's supplier, the United States Recording Company, but the current Justice Department inquiries have gone far beyond the information uncovered about the bureau by the House committee or its Senate counterpart.

LIFE EXPECTANCY UP TO 72.4 YEARS IN U.S.

WASHINGTON, July 10 (UPI)—A baby born last year can expect to live 72.4 years, the highest life expectancy rate every recorded in the United States, the National Center for Health Statistics says.

A baby boy has 68.5 years ahead while a girl has 76.4, the center said. Life expectancy has been increasing over the last decade and last year topped the age of 72 for the first time, up from 71.9 years in 1974.

Death rates in 1975 reached a low, despite a flu epidemic, primarily because of declines in three of the four leading causes of death: heart disease, stroke and related diseases and auto accidents.

The United States infant mortality rate was also the lowest ever. It has been dropping 4 per cent a year the last decade.

However, cancer deaths increased 2.3 per cent over 1974, the highest ever, the center's provisional vital statistics report for 1975 said. The center, a unit of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, should publish final statistics for 1975 by the end of the year.

Cancer remains the second national killer, with a 1975 death rate of 174.4 per 100,000 population, compared with 170.5 for 1974.

The estimated 1975 death rates for heart disease, stil the top killer, was down 2.9 per cent from 1974 even though it continued to cause more than one-third of the 1,910,000 deaths recorded.

Judges Back F.B.I. in Suit For Watergate Case Data

WASHINGTON, July 8 (UPI)—A three-judge Federal court ruled yesterday that persons applying for information from Government agencies must show an "exceptional need or urgency" before they can obtain data ahead of others.

All three judges voted to reverse a ruling by District Court Judge Aubrey Robinson ordering the Federal Bureau of Investigation to turn over immediately any documents relating to the role of the former acting F.B.I. director, L. Patrick Gray, in the Watergate coverup.

The bureau said it would produce any information it could under the Freedom of Information act, but placed the request behind 5,137 other data applications received earlier.

The Gray information was sought by a group of George Washington University law students, calling themselves Open America. Aside from seeking the information, they wanted to test portions of the act requiring disclosure on request within 30 days.

Carey Signs a Measure Safeguarding Teachers

ALBANY, July 8 (UPI)—A bill requiring that probationary teachers be given 30 days notice and a statement of reasons before a school board can vote to deny tenure or dismiss them has been signed into law, Governor Carey's office announced today.

The measure provides the same procedural safeguards and notice currently granted when a school superintendent recommends dismissal or denial of tenure to the board in that it gives teachers time to respond before a final decision is made.

Jacksonville Mayor, Who Heads The League of Cities, Is Indicted

Special to The New York Times

JACKONSVILLE, Fla., July 8—The Duval County grand jury today indicted Mayor Hans Tanzler Jr. of Jacksonville, president of the National League of Cities, on one count of perjury before a notary public and two counts of failure to report contributions or gifts.

State Attorney T. Edward Austin, who was legal adviser to the grand jury, said he was "sad and depressed." Mr. Austin was once the city's general counsel under Mr. Tanzler.

"I think we have performed our job as legal adviser to the grand jury and the grand jury has made its decision," Mr. Austin said.

Mr. Tanzler, who was in his office in City Hall when the indictments were announced, could not be reached immediately for comment.

The perjury charge is a felony. The two other charges are misdemeanors.

The perjury indictment charges that Mr. Tanzler filed a statement under oath on Jan. 1, 1971, as required by Florida election laws, that "no contributions or expenditures had been incurred by him prior to the time of qualifying and since the last preceding election."

The grand jury said that Mr. Tanzler had received an $8.000 contribution on Dec. 30, 1970, from former Gov. Farris Bryant. The jury also said Mr. Tanzler was aware of the contribution.

One of the misdemeanor counts charges Mr. Tanzler with failure to report contributions made to his campaign between Jan. 1 and June 30, 1973.

FOSTER SON HELD IN HOFFA INQUIRY

Move Tied to Investigation of Father's Disappearance

By AGIS SALPUKAS
Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, July 8—Charles O'Brien, the foster son of James R. Hoffa, a key target of a grand jury investigation of Mr. Hoffa's disappearance, has been arrested on an indictment charging that he accepted gifts from a Detroit automobile dealership.

The indictment, charging Mr. O'Brien with two violations of the Taft-Hartley Act, is another move, Federal investigators say, to put pressure on key persons who they believe were involved in the disappearance of Mr. Hoffa, former head of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

Investigators have said that they have pieced together who kidnapped and murdered Mr. Hoffa last July 30 and why, but that they do not have strong enough evidence to go to court.

They now hope that indictments of key witnesses who have appeared before the grand jury will put pressure on them to consider plea bargaining and to become witnesses for the state in the case.

Mr. O'Brien, who was arrested in Miami, has moved from Detroit to Hallendale, Fla., where he is an organizer in the Teamsters' Southeastern Conference. He has said in interviews that he drove a car borrowed from Joey Giacalone, the son of an organized crime figure here, Anthony Giacalone, in the vicinity of the restaurant where Mr. Hoffa was last seen. But he has denied being involved in Mr. Hoffa's disappearance.

Federal investigators have said privately, however, that Mr. O'Brien may have picked up three men connected with Anthony Provenzano, a former New Jersey teamster leader, at Detroit Metropolitan Airport on the day of the disappearance.

The three men—Thomas Andretta, 38 years old, Gabriel Briguglio, 38, and his brother Salvatore, 46, all of New Jersey and all connected with Teamster Local 560, of which Mr. Provenzano was once the president—were described by Federal prosecutors here as under investigation in the Hoffa case.

Mr. Provenzano and Salvatore Briguglio were indicted June 23 with two other men on charges of kidnapping and murdering Anthony Castellito, secretary-treasurer of Teamster Local 560 in 1961.

Federal officials hope the indictment will help influence the two to give information on the Hoffa case.

Federal prosecutors here today made another attempt to break what they have described as obstructionist tactics that have slowed their investigation. Frederick Dana, special attorney for the United States Organized Crime Strike Force, asked Federal Judge Ralph Freeman to disqualify two Detroit lawyers from representing four witnesses in the investigation.

Mr. Dana said that William E. Bufalino Sr. and his son, William E. Bufalino II, be barred from representing the witnesses because they also represented Mr. Provenzano, Mr. Andretta and the Briguglios before the grand jury.

Mr. Dana said that the witnesses would be asked to testify about the activities of these men on July 30 and that Mr. Bufalino was therefore in a position of conflict and could not be objective in advising the witnesses to tell the truth.

Three of the witnesses, Armand Castellito and Paul Ciampi, both business agents of Local 560, and Mrs. Karen Schnable, the personal secretary of Sammy Provenzano, brother of Anthony, the vice president of Local 560, have been given immunity. The fourth, Frederick Furino, a truck driver at the local, has not been given immunity.

Conrail Executive Named As Metropolitan Manager

Kenneth E. Smith, general manager of Conrail's Western region, has been appointed general manager of the metropolitan region, which takes in the Hudson, Harlem and New Haven commuter lines operating out of Grand Central Terminal.

Mr. Smith succeeds Robert K. Pattison, who has been named president of the Long Island Rail Road.

According to Richard D. Spence, Conrail president, the new manager's task will be "to continue the transformation of the three commuter lines in the area into one of the finest—if not the finest—commuter systems anywhere."

The three lines operate some 500 trains carrying 142,000 riders each weekday.

Vengeance Suggested as M... In Slaying of Arizona Re...

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

PHOENIX, July 8—In a deposition made public today, Neal Roberts, a former Assistant Arizona Attorney General, asserted that a close associate of a prominent Arizona landowner spoke of "old-style Western justice" before the slaying of Don Bolles, a reported for the Arizona Republic.

Mr. Bolles died June 13, 11 days after a bomb exploded in his car shortly after he had been lured to a downtown hotel by an inforant, supposedly with a tip about a land frand scandal involving prominent Arizona politicians.

John H. Adamson, a 32-year-old racing dog owner, has been charged with the murder and is scheduled to stand trial Sept. 2.

The deposition made public in a Maricopa County Superior Court today was taken June 15 in an interview by Phoenix detectives with Mr. Roberts, who is now a lawyer in private practice, and who has admitted being with Mr. Adamson.

Mr. Roberts has also told the police that he arranged a charter flight to Lake Havasu City, 150 miles northwest of here, for Mr. Adamson shortly after the bombing.

The deposition was made public as part of a move by Mr. Roberts to prove that prosecutors promised him limited immunity in the case on June 13.

In the deposition, Mr. Roberts makes a number of charges against Max Dunlap, 47, a wealthy contractor with extensive holdings in the Lake Havasu area, and Kemper Marley Sr., 70, a wealthy rancher and businessman who has long been active in Democratic politics here, and who reared Mr. Dunlap since Mr. Dunlap was 12.

Both men refused to talk to reporters this evening about the charges made in the deposition.

Article Linked to Resignation

Mr. Marley had been the subject of a number of investigative reports by Mr. Bolles. An article Mr. Bolles wrote in March about legal difficulties the rancher had is generally credited here with forcing Mr. Marley to resign from the Arizona Racing Commission seven days after he took the job.

Mr. Roberts said he introduced Mr. Adamson to Mr. Dunlap about six months ago after Mr. Adamson said he had some "hot silver" that he would like to sell. Mr. Roberts said:

"Subsequent to that it was my understanding from Max that he was going to buy all of the silver — how much, I don't know. Whether it was $100,000 or a quarter of a million dollars, I don't know."

"Max came to me," Mr. Roberts continued, "and told me they had a deal whereby they were going to land at some airplane strip, some place, and pick up the silver."

A down payment was made, Mr. Roberts said he was led to believe, but the deal was not consummated.

"Now supposedly," Mr. Roberts asserted, "this whole transaction was being financed by Kemper Marley," a remark apparently based only on his interpretation of assertions from Mr. Dunlap, and not verified independently by Mr. Roberts or anyone else at this

Probate Judge Defers Decision In Struggle Over Hughes Estate

By WALLACE TURNER
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, July 8—A probate judge deferred decision today on motions that could change the lineup of contestants who seek control of the billion-dollar estate of the late Howard R. Hughes.

Superior Court Judge Neil Lake took under submission, with obligation to rule within 60 days, motions that make the following contradictory and mutually exclusive requests:

¶To give further authority over California aspects of the Hughes estate to Richard C. Gano Jr., a cousin of Mr. Hughes.

¶To dismiss Mr. Gano entirely, and replace him through the appointment of Noah Dietrich as special administrator. Mr. Dietrich is attempting to get courts to accept a purported handwritten will that names him as executor of the Hughes estate. This will has been offered for probate in Las Vegas, Nev., where it is under attack as not having been drawn by Mr. Hughes.

¶To rebuff Mr. Dietrich's attempt to bring into probate the purported will, and to dismiss Mr. Gano as temporary administrator, while turning over the control of the estate to Bruce Altman, Los Angeles County public administrator.

As the brief hearing before Judge Lake ended today, a spokesman for Summa Corporation, the main Hughes company, said that the company had been notified that a hearing would be conducted in Houston on July 23, where the Texas authorities would advance their claim that Mr. Hughes was properly a resident of Texas when he died and that his affairs should be processed through Texas courts.

Meantime, a hearing is scheduled in Las Vegas on July 30 on motions filed by several litigants who seek to share in the wealth left by Mr. Hughes, who apparently left no will. He died April 5 in a plane bound for Houston from Acapulco, Mexico, where he lived his last days in a hotel suite.

Summa Corporation, a holding company wherein resides virtually all Mr. Hughes's vast fortune, is a Delaware corporation. A chancery court in Wilmington has named Will R. Lummis of Houston, a Hughes cousin, as temporary administrator of Summa's affairs.

Mr. Lummis, a lawyer in the Houston firm that handled some of Mr. Hughes's legal affairs, is the son of Mrs. Annett Gano Lummis, Mr. Hughes's aunt and is his closest surviving relative. She is 85 years old.

The interest of public officials in trying to control where the estate will be probated stems from the large fees that will come to the government entity that probates the will.

In California, for example, the fee for public administration of an estate the size of Mr. Hughes's is about $10 million.

Mr. Altman, the Los Angeles public administrator, is represented by Gordon W. Treharne, a deputy county counsel.

In pleadings they filed relative to today's hearing before Judge Lake, they argued that Mr. Gano, the temporary administrator in California for Mr. Hughes's affairs, had taken actions that "probably will result in the diminution of the estate in California."

This action, they argued, was Mr. Gano's acquiesence in a suit filed in Delaware to cancel Summa stock now held by the Bank of America and replace it with new stock. Neither Summa nor the Bank of America has explained why the bank had custody of some of the Summa stock when Mr. Hughes died.

All this maneuvering involves a complex of companies with 20,000 employees. These include five hotels and seven casinos, as well as an air terminal and extensive land holdings in Nevada; some 7,000 employees of Hughes Air West, a regional airline, and about 6,000 employees of the Hughes Helicopter Division of Summa Corporation.

Hughes Aircraft Company was not controlled by Mr. Hughes at his death and is not involved in the litigation over the estate.

If the estate must pay inheritance taxes, these would amount to as much as 77 percent of the value. These could be spread over 10 years, but first payments would be due within a few months.

A responsible source said that Mr. Hughes left some $300 million in cash and marketable securities. This money could be used to make the initial tax payments and to generate enough to meet further payments. But these considerations lie beyond a settlement of the fundamental undecided question of who will be in charge.

Limit on Probate Judge

LAS VEGAS, Nev., July 8 (UPI)—The judge handling Mr. Hughes's probate matters has been disqualified from all proceedings involving an alleged will that names Mr. Hughes's purported illegitimate son as his sole heir.

CHRYSLER OUTPUT CUT BY A STRIKE

Production Is Curbed After Walkout at Engine Plant

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, July 8—The Chrysler Corporation announced today curtailment of production at five of its car and truck assembly plants, which employ 18,000 workers, because of a strike at an engine plant in suburban Trenton.

Negotiations were under way between plant officials and representatives of striking United Automobile Workers Local 372. The 4,100 workers at the Trenton plant walked out yesterday because of unsettled health and safety grievances.

Robert Smith, president of the local, said that a membership meeting was scheduled for Sunday afternoon. Other union sources said they hoped that the dispute over working conditions would be resolved soon and that the weekend membership meeting would be held to ratify an agreement, with a return to work Monday.

Chrysler spokesmen said that they were awaiting developments before deciding on assembly plant shutdowns for next week.

The auto maker today cut the work shifts in half at the Jefferson Avenue assembly plant in Detroit and the Windsor, Ontario, assembly plant, for the rest of the week.

Chrysler put the 2,400 workers at Jefferson on one four-hour shift. The Windsor plant, which has 5,300 workers, is a two-shift operation, and each was changed to four hours.

The Belvidere, Ill., Chrysler assembly plant will be put on a four-hour shift tomorrow. The plant employs 3,800 workers.

Belvidere and Jefferson build the full-size Chrysler, Dodge and Plymouth cars. The Windsor plant builds two intermediate-size models, the Chrysler Cordoba and Dodge Charger S.E.

The vehicles use the 400 and 440-cubic-inch V-8 engines built at the Trenton plant. The Trenton plant also makes a 225-cubic-inch six-cyclinder engine used in the popular Plymouth Volare and Dodge Aspen compacts.

However, the six-cylinder engine is also built at a Windsor plant and Chrysler has another engine plant on Mound Road that builds smaller V-8 engines used in the compacts and some intermediate cars.

As a result, the Trenton strike did not immediately affect the two compact-car plants in Hamtramck, Mich., and Newark, Del., or the company's intermediate-car plant on Lynch Road in Detroit.

Meanwhile, five more auto plants around the industry will be closed tomorrow for model changeover work, in addition to eight plants already shut.

U.S. Aide Arrives in Zambia To Start African Briefings

LUSAKA, Zambia, July 8 (Reuters)—William Schaufele, the leading African affairs official in the State Department, arrived here today for talks with President Kenneth Kaunda on American efforts to help find a peaceful solution to the problems of southern Africa.

Mr. Schaufele, who is Assistant Secrtary of State for African Affairs, will report to President Kaunda on last month's talks in West Germany between Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Prime Minister John Worster of South Africa.

The American official will visit at least five other African heads of state.

This week elect to hear the political wit of Art Buchwald.

ON THE ARTHRITIS MYSTERY

Can what you eat - or don't eat - make you arthritis-prone or arthritis-resistant?

It flies squarely in the face of orthodox medical belief that what we eat or don't . . . that nutrition in any significant way . . . could have anything to do with arthritis, that painful, often restricting, and too often disabling and deforming affliction which, if we live long enough, almost all of us can expect to acquire.

In its most common chronic, degenerative, osteo-arthritic (and often called "wear-and-tear") form, it affects at least 12 million Americans. In its more acute and often devastatingly crippling "hot" form, rheumatoid arthritis, it affects at least 5 million.

Medical practitioners and organizations dedicated to the arthritis problem are among the first to acknowledge that research progress has been slow, much remains to be fathomed about the arthritis mystery, and while current treatment often can be helpful to some extent, it leaves much to be desired.

But as to any possible relationship of diet to arthritis, the official view of The Arthritis Foundation, for example, is that no food has been found to be involved as a cause of arthritis and no food constitutes an effective measure against arthritis . . . and the only concern arthritics need have about diet is simply to eat a "normal, well-balanced and nourishing" one.

Yet there are indications that inadequacies in what for us has become a "normal" diet may have some significant bearing on the prevalence, severity and extent of damage of arthritis—and that correcting those inadequacies may provide relief for many sufferers, perhaps retard or even halt the progress of their affliction, and perhaps even for the still-unaffected ward it off.

Some physicians and biochemists, not inclined to rest content with the conventional view, have played their hunches about nutritional therapy, one of them as far back as 25 years ago and the others more recently. They were, they reported, encouraged by their results, as were their patients. And if they weren't always clear about why their nutritional methods seemed to work, some newer insights even now are supplying the possible reasons.

FORD PICKS UP 12 IN NORTH DAKOTA

Reagan Forces Avoid Floor Fight and Accept Plan Giving Them 4 Delegates

By JON NORDHEIMER
Special to The New York Times

FARGO, N.D., July 8 — The forces of Ronald Reagan backed away today from a floor fight with supporters of President Ford and settled for four of the 18 delegates North Dakota will send to the Republican National Convention in Kansas City.

The Republican state convention unanimously approved a slate that gave the President 12 delegates, while two were officially listed as uncommitted.

The Reagan forces had hoped to split the delegation evenly with the President, and as late as this morning were circulating reports that they would field their own slate in an effort to win all the delegates.

But polls of the convention delegates convinced them that a floor fight might not only be futile but also might cost them the four delegates that party leaders favoring Mr. Ford were willing to assign them in the interest of party harmony.

"We feel the Reagan people are underrepresented on this slate, but we can live with it," Dave Robinson, state Reagan chairman, told the convention.

By the time the vote was counted, however, Reagan strategists were crowing that they had pressured the Ford forces into giving up six delegates that could have gone into the President's column had it not been for their threats and maneuvering.

Ford Total Now 1,062

The President thus increased his total in The New York Times count of Republican delegates to 1,062, while Mr. Reagan's tally moved to 1,024.

There are now 93 uncommitted delegates and 80 delegates are still to be chosen. A minimum of 1,130 are needed for the nomination.

The threat of a fight loomed early in today's session when the nominating committee controlled by the state Republican chairman, Allan Young, who leans to Mr. Ford, chipped away at the 12-4-2 alignment of delegates he had originally proposed. The committee replaced one Reagan delegate with a Ford delegate and one uncommitted delegate with a Ford delegate.

But the Reagan floor leaders protested the 14-3-1 proposal and warned of divisions within the state party if the leaders persisted in their plan.

"They told us they wanted to place two long-time party workers on the delegates, and it was pure coincidence that they happened to be replacing Reagan delegates," Mr. Robinson, a cigar-chewing rancher from Coleharbor declared in an interview.

"When I left that conference I didn't leave them with the impression that I believed them worth a damn. They are chipping us down to nothing and it looks like the only way we can stop them is to fight them."

He said that a floor fight was "chancy, but could win us the whole pie."

A series of other conferences, however, convinced the Reagan people that a Reagan slate could not be pushed through the convention. When the party leaders offered to restore the proposed slate to the original 12-4-2 lineup, the battle was over.

Battle Not Expected

Republicans in North Dakota had not expected that their state convention would turn into a battleground between Ford and Reagan strategists. Stunned by Democratic victories in recent year, the state party had hoped to emerge from the convention with a unified slate of local and state candidates.

One target is the Governor's office, which the Democrats have controlled since 1960. Gov. Arthur A. Link, elected in 1972, is expected to be slightly more vulnerable than the incumbent United States Senator, Quentin N. Burdick, another Democrat up for election. The Republicans are eager to take over the State house after being out of power for so long.

Republican unity, however, has been threatened by the Reagan-Ford fight, a development not foreseen in mid-April, when the party machinery at the precinct level began selecting delegates to the state convention.

The President appeared then to be in a commanding position—it was before the May 1 Texas sweep turned things around for Mr. Reagan—and the prospect that the 18-member delegation from North Dakota would be bitterly contested seemed far fetched. But that is what has developed.

Mr. Reagan dropped in this morning to make a personal pitch for his candidacy, and Washington sent emissaries to represent Mr. Ford.

But aside from professional strategists pushing their partisan views, a number of delegates who supported Mr. Reagan said that they would have no trouble backing Mr. Ford if he is the nominee.

WASHINGTON, July 8—President Ford's campaign leaders called his victory in North Dakota the start of "a series of breakthroughs" that would win him the party's Presidential nomination.

to see a Ford-Reagan ticket, including a number unwilling to say whether they leaned to Mr. Ford or Mr. Reagan.

Several other potential Vice-Presidential nominees gained approving comments. Former Gov. John B. Connally of Texas was named by 12 delegates, Commerce Secretary Elliot L. Richardson by five, Vice President Rockefeller by four and Senator Howard H. Baker Jr., of Tennessee, by two.

At a news conference today in Washington, James A. Baker 3d, the vice chairman in charge of delegates for the President Ford Committee, claimed 14 additional commitments. Of those, eight had already been counted by The Times as committed to the President, and three, all in New York State, had been counted as leaning to Mr. Ford.

The three—Raymond Dybas and J. Gregory Merriam, both of upstate New York, and Salvatore J. Scotto of Brooklyn—later issued a statement confirming that they had made firm commitments.

Three delegates in Guam who had been counted as uncommitted were also listed by Mr. Baker as solidly behind the President, and Reagan aides confirmed that they had no hope of winning their support. All 16 territorial delegates now back the President.

Peter Kaye, a spokesman for the President Ford Committee, said that the committee had waited "until people are awfully hard" before announcing commitments. He indicated that there would be further briefings like today's in the weeks preceding the opening of the convention Aug. 22.

Commitments Called Firm

In listing his state-by-state claims, Mr. Baker said that seven New Jersey delegates were undecided, confirming figures from the challenger's camp. The Times, unable to verify the claim independently, has listed all 67 for Mr. Ford, as the President's New Jersey backers had asserted.

Among other changes reflected in The Times's new totals are the following:

¶A switch of four votes in New York from Mr. Ford to uncommitted. They had been counted as pro-Ford on the basis of votes cast for them by proxy at a caucus of the delegation, but they said in interviews that this was incorrect.

¶Commitments of two additional Wyoming delegates to Mr. Reagan, largely as a result of the President's veto of a mineral-rights bill strongly advocated by that state.

¶Commitments to Mr. Ford of one delegate in New York, H. Richard Lewis, in addition to the three who announced today, one additional delegate in West Virginia and one in Pennsylvania.

Those leaning to Mr. Ford include seven in Hawaii, nine in New York, two in Virginia and individual delegates in Kansas, Louisiana, North Carolina and South Carolina.

The leaning delegate in South Carolina, J. Drake Evans, may be particularly significant. A strong supporter of Barry Goldwater in 1964, he is closely allied to most of the five remaining uncommitteds there who have so far not stated a preference.

REAGAN'S LAWYERS CALL FORD UNFAIR

Weigh Suit Alleging Violation of Federal Campaign Act

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8—Ronald Reagan's legal advisers are planning to go to court in an attempt to block President Ford from taking what they see as unfair advantage of his office in the contest for the Republican Presidential nomination.

The lawsuit, now being drafted, also will attempt to force the Republican National Convention to provide the Reagan forces with accommodations for the Kansas City convention roughly comparable with those reserved for the President and his supporters.

Loren A. Smith, general counsel of Citizens for Reagan, said today that he was researching various possibilities for court action because the Federal Election Commission had denied his request for a public hearing on a series of charges that the President Ford Committee was evading the campaign law.

The commission refused yesterday to schedule a hearing on the basis of a letter from Mr. Smith, but said that, if he chose, he could file a formal complaint, leading to a secret investigation by the agency. Mr. Smith indicated today he would sue instead.

In a letter last week to the commission chairman, Vernon W. Thomson, Mr. Smith said that there were "numerous cases" of travel expenses of White House staff members being charged as political spending but not their public salaries, thus giving the President more leeway under his preconvention spending ceiling.

Mr. Smith also noted that the President had charged only about $100,000 worth of travel aboard Air Force One, the President's jet, to his political account, on a credit basis, while the Reagan committee had been forced to pay $800,000 in advance for the former California Governor's chartered jet.

The Reagan attorney also protested the fact that the Republican National Committee had allocated 388 hotel rooms and 650 gallery passes for the convention to the President but only 100 rooms and 300 passes to his opponent for the nomination. He said the Reagan forces were entitled to "absolute numerical equality."

Carter Asking Written Reports From Prospects for No. 2 Spot

By RICHARD L. MADDEN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8 — Possible Vice-Presidential nominees being screened by Jimmy Carter and a close Carter aide have been asked to answer a list of written questions about their financial and medical records, Congressional sources said today.

The initial screening has been done by Charles Kirbo, a 59-year-old Atlanta lawyer who was chief of staff to Mr. Carter when he was Governor of Georgia.

Mr. Kirbo met here last evening with Representative Peter W. Rodino Jr., Democrat of New Jersey and chairman of the House Judiciary committee, and met last week with a number of Senators, including Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, John Glen of Ohio and Adlai E. Stevenson 3d of Illinois.

Chat Precedes Questions

After the initial contact by Mr. Kirbo, Mr. Carter met in Georgia with Mr. Muskie last Monday and with Mr. Mondale and Mr. Glenn today. Mr. Carter, who is certain to be the Presidential nominee at the Democratic National Convention in New York City next week, is expected to meet with other possible running mates before announcing his selection.

Congressional sources said that Mr. Kirbo's general procedure was to chat for an hour or so with each possible Vice-Presidential nominee about general philosophical and political matters and to drop off a two- or three-page list of questions to be answered before Mr. Carter makes his selection.

One person who has seen the list said the questions dealt largely with financial and medical history of the type that any applicant for a high-level job might be asked. Also, the prospective running mates were asked to make available their income tax returns for the last five years, he said.

"There was nothing offensive; they were very straight questions," the source said.

Mr. Kirbo was quoted by The Associated Press as saying that the questions asked of the Vice-Presidential prospects were designed to tell him about their conduct, any family problems and about thier health and financial problems, if any.

"There are about 20 to 25 questions you can ask a fellow and he will either have to tell you or lie," Mr. Kirbo was quoted as saying.

The Carter selection process presumably is designed to prevent a repeat of 1972 when Senator Thomas F. Eagleton of Missouri was replaced as Senator George McGovern's running mate after it was disclosed that Mr. Eagleton had been voluntarily hospitalized during the 1960's for nervous exhaustion and fatigue.

Clark Urges Law to Cut Bribery By U.S. Corporations Abroad

Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, July 8—Richard L. McVeigh, former United States Attorney for Alaska, and eight other persons were indicted by a Federal grand jury here today for conspiring to set up a large-scale prostitution and gambling operation for Alaskan pipeline workers.

The seven-count indictment, a result of two years of undercover work by Federal and state law enforcement officers, also alleges that at least two women had been recruited from the northern California area and transported to Alaska for purposes of prostitution.

According to the indictment, the alleged conspirators met throughout 1974 and 1975 in California, Nevada and Alaska to discuss arrangements for setting up the operation, which was allegedly to net them from $80,000 a month to $1-million in six months. The indictment said prostitutes were to be supplied from the Northern California area.

Pay Offs Are Alleged

Mr. McVeigh, now an Anchorage lawyer, told uncover agents that he could arrange "payoffs" to keep local law-enforcement from interfereing in the operation, the indictment said.

Also named in the indictment was Alexander Miller, a former legislative assistant to former Gov. William Egan of Alaska.

The indictment charges the conspirators with the use of interstate facilities for racketering, and the interstate transportation of women for the purpose of prostitution. Lothons named in the indictment are Jake L. Schumaker, 44 years old, former owner of a bar in Fremont, Calif.; Donald R. Owens, 48, former co-owner of casinos in Carson City, Nev.; Charles Tourine, 69, of Miami, Fla.; Frank E. Irick, 58, of Anchorage, a real estate consultant; Andrew Day, 41; Donald MacNamee, 33; and Vicky Cornell, 37, all of Valdez, Alaska. Mr. Touring has been identified as a mafia associate.

William Brocket, San Francisco attorney for Mr. Miller and Mr. McVeigh, said that both of his clients would plead not guilty.

F.B.I. Called 'Unsubtle'

"We knew this was coming," he said. "The F.B.I. was unsubtle in their questioning of people. They said they wanted to get Dick McVeigh."

He said that the indictment indicated a "grand conspiracy when all it boils down to is two prostitutes in a Bar in a mining town, which, by the way, the F.B.I. half owned and took a cut of the profits from."

The indictment resulted from a two-year investigation involving the Federal Bureau of Investigation, assisted by Alaska state troopers and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. Two San Francisco F.B.I. agents infiltrated the group of alleged conspirators.

Arraignment has been set in San Francisco Federal court for July 22.

Draft Resister, Back as a Democratic Delegate, Faces Charge

By LUCINDA FRANKS

Fritz Efaw, an indicted draft-resister who was elected by American Democrats abroad as an alternate delegate to the Democratic National Convention, returned home yesterday after seven years of exile.

Although a warrant is out for his arrest, Mr. Efaw, 29 years old, was not arrested as he walked out of Customs to a resounding welcome from his family, friends and amnesty supporters, including Gold Star Mothers for Amnesty and the families of other deserters and draft resisters.

Mr. Efaw's lawyer, Jonathan Marsh of the American Civil Liberties Union, says he made an "agreement" with the United States Attorney's office in Brooklyn that if Mr. Efaw was not arrested at Kennedy Airport, where he arrived on a Pan American jet from London, he would surrender to the authorities today.

"I can hardly believe it," said Mr. Efaw, as he embraced his mother, Leonah Scurlock, who had not seen him for several years. She clung to him, weeping. Dressed in a dapper gray French-cut suit, and standing beneath "Welcome Home, Fritz" signs, he spent several minutes in homecoming embraces, with his brother, Clark Efaw, and stepsister, Marilyn Scurlock, before giving a speech.

Mr. Efaw, a computer analyst, was elected as a delegate by members of the Democratic Party living abroad—this is the first convention in which they have had votes at the national convention. He was elected on the basis of his stand for unconditional amnesty. He plans to lobby with other delegates at the convention to amend the proposed platform plank on amnesty so that there would be a full pardon for draft resisters, deserters, veterans with bad discharges, and civilian antiwar activists.

The proposed plank, which will be voted on at the convention next week, includes a full pardon for draft resisters only with the possibility of a case-by-case review for deserters.

It is not certain, however, whether Mr. Efaw will ever even get to the convention floor. According to Mr. Marsh, his client has agreed to appear before a United States magistrate in Federal District Court in Brooklyn for arraignment today.

The usual procedure would be for magistrate to order Mr. Efaw to appear before a Federal judge in his hometown, Oklahoma City, where he was indicted, to face trial.

However, Mr. Marsh said he intended to plead for a delay in Mr. Efaw's removal to Oklahoma "so he can carry out his duly elected responsibility to his constituents by attending the Democratic convention."

"We have been told that the United States Attorney's office in Brooklyn would have no problem in recommending to the judge that we be accommodated," said Mr. Marsh. "However, I am wary."

'Illegal War'

"Seven years ago, I left the United States as an act of opposition to the unjust and illegal United States war in Indochina," said Mr. Efaw, whose return was sponsored by the National Council for Universal and Unconditional Amnesty." "Today, I am returning as an elected member of the overseas delegation to the Democratic Convention."

Mr. Efaw, whose brother served in the Navy during the Vietnam War, said that he had been elected in part by other war resisters abroad and that the extent to which the government allowed him time to represent them and the kind of support he received from his fellow Democrats "will show who is and who is not committed to an open party where all points of view can be heard and debated."

His mother, who had sat dabbing her eyes and wringing her hands before her son's arrival, said that the Bicentennial celebration made her feel bad.

"You would see these television spots where people would say this country is so free and I know that is not true," she said. "My son and others like him never had the freedom to be what they wanted to be."

Mr. Efaw was surrounded today by other members of the nine-man overseas Democratic delegation, which includes professors, architects, and lawyers who came to lend their support to his cause. He hopes that his case will be dismissed in Oklahoma on the technical grounds that his draft board rejected his application for conscientious objector status without stating reasons.

The prosecutor in Oklahoma City has already moved once to dismiss the case, but this motion was rejected because Mr. Efaw was not present, still a fugitive.

Mr. Efaw has also received the support of Harold Ickes, a Udall delegate in the New York delegation, who was on hand for Mr. Efaw's arrival yesterday.

Ex-U.S. Attorney and 8 Others Indicted in Alaska Prostitution

By THOMAS P. RONAN

Ramsey Clark yesterday urged the enactment of a Federal law to bar bribery by American corporations, charging that the practice had "strained American relations with friendly nations, undermined the free market system and corrupted domestic policy-making."

The former United States Attorney General, in his first position paper in his campaign for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator from New York, said the law should ban all bribery of American or foreign officials and Americans doing business abroad.

Among his other suggestions were personal fines for corporate officers violating the ban and greater financial accountability by large corporations.

He said that more than 125 corporations in the United States had admitted bribing politicians and business middlemen abroad and that 41 businesses had also admitted making illegal domestic political contributions.

He said he also favored an international code of conduct for multinational corporations if it could be enforced through an international court of law.

"It is time for America to realize that corporate profit by bribery is our loss," he said. "As long as corporate corruption continues to distort law, ethics and the marketplace, the public will have little faith in its leaders.

"As Senator I would stress the fidelity all Americans—powerful and powerless—owe to the rule of law. The average citizen must obey the law. So, too, should the largest corporations."

Paul O'Dwyer, the City Council President, who also is seeking the Democratic nomination for Senator, said yesterday that experts in international law he had consulted agreed that the Israeli rescue of hostages at the Entebbe airport in Uganda was justified under the law.

Representative Bella S. Abzug, another candidate, has suggested in reaction to the hijacking of the plane carrying the Israelis that all nations sign a pledge not to support hijackers and said that "as many sanctions as possible" should be considered for a country refusing to go along.

The other candidates for the Democratic nomination are Daniel P. Moynihan, a former United States representative to the United Nations, and Abraham Hirschfeld, a businessman.

TV BEGINS TO USE FIBER TECHNOLOGY

a plastic covering, it would take up minimal space in a city's underground ducts.

Not the least of its virtues is that it is immune to electrical interference.

But by far the most attractive feature of fiber optics in its television use is its ability to subdivide existing channels on a television set to provide an almost unlimited number of audio and video channels.

The fiber being used by Teleprompter, although only 90 microns in diameter (a micron is one-millionth of a meter), can with the use of a laser beam carry up to 167 television channels. A bundle of six fibers makes possible more than 1,000 channels.

In contrast, a single ¾ inch coaxial cable has the ability, under the present technology, to provide 40 channels, and most of the coaxial cable that is in use today has a capacity for only 20.

Teleprompter is using the fiber to carry a single channel, however, that of Home Box Office, the pay-television service. The fiber is connected to the microwave receiving equipment on the roof of the Washington Bridge Apartments, near the George Washington Bridge, and carries the H.B.O. picture through the high-rise building to the Teleprompter system's head-end on the lower floors.

There, the picture is converted back to an electronic signal and is sent out over the system's coaxial cables.

Because its light-wave operation is so limited, Teleprompter is using a light-emitting diode (LED), instead of a more expensive solid-state laser, to generate the light pulses.

This mode is the same as the light source used in electronic calculators and digital watches.

The use of optical fibers in the telephone business also is moving faster than was expected until large-scale manufacture began in the past year.

A 2,000-foot length of telephone cable, containing a bundle of 144 glass fibers, has been tested for the past six months at the Norcross, Ga., cable works of the Western Electric Company, manufacturing arm of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The tests already have shown that there can be up to 16 splices of the fiber cable in a 7-mile stretch before the message becomes significantly garbled. Such a cable length would be more than enough to link telephone exchanges in most large cities, where conduit space beneath the streets for thick copper cables is almost used up.

Medicaid reimbursement rates "so low that hospitals don't even get back the money they spend."

At Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital, the 169-bed facility with the city's only eye bank had 128 beds occupied. A normal 24 patients had been admitted, and 28 operations, including a corneal graft, had been performed.

Thurston Long, the administrator, said a number of "grateful patients" from the past had shown up among 50 or more volunteers. But Mr. Long said that if the strike were prolonged, services might be hurt "because people get tired."

At Beth Israel Medical Center, striking union members lined up outside a makeshift cashier's office two blocks away to pick up pay checks for the week ended last Sunday.

Patients had been moved out of the Dazian Pavilion into the Linksy and Karpas Pavilions. John Reilly, assistant director, said "things are going so well that we might change our policy and begin taking some elective surgery cases Monday."

Concern for Patients

On the picket line, Florence Weisfeld, a social worker, said, "we're respecting medical emergencies, we care about our patients." However, she contended, "We are top-heavy with administrators" and asserted that workers giving direct patient care had been laid off.

"They start cutting from the bottom, but somehow never reach the top when it comes to layoffs," Lea Tenneriello, another striking social service worker, said.

But Montefiore's director of communications, Grace M. Urrows, said that last March 9, the hospital had laid off 93 union members to save $1.4 million, while also letting 72 others go, including 30 physicians and others with doctoral degrees, to save $2.2 million.

Patient at Jacob Geriatric Center is lifted into ambulance as nursing homes prepare for hospital employees strike.

Elderly Being Relocated Often Feel Dislocated

By RONALD SMOTHERS

That peculiar mental fragility that comes with old age was being overtaxed in 14 nursing homes around the city yesterday as nearly 1,600 patients were being moved in preparation for a strike at the institutions on Saturday by members of District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees.

Some residents were so confused that their sense of the exodus yesterday got muddled with vivid impressions of past, more terrifying, dislocations. Some, the less lucid among them, had no idea of what was happening, and others thought of it calmly as a vacation.

There was a "kind of reverse, triage" going on at a number of the homes, said Gerald Gottlieb, executive director of the Daughters of Jacob Geriatric Center, a 509-patient facility that takes up three blocks in the area of Teller Avenue and East 167th Street in the Bronx. The homes were being empited of the least-dependent residents so that the 100 nonstriking staff members out of a total of 550 could better care for the most dependent.

Mr. Gottlieb, a lanky, mild-mannered man with deep-set eyes, said that 45 patients were moved yesterday to other nursing homes not affected by the strik and that 118 would go today. Fifty-two more will be sent home to relatives, with a two weeks' supply of the medication they need.

"Many are on the border line of senility or confusion," said Gladys Dow, nursing director at the home, "and this dislocation can push them over. During the 1973 strike, many went away knowing relatives were and came back where they lived, who their not knowing any of those things. After all, this is their home."

Betty Simonoff, a 79-year-old resident of the Sisters of Jacob Home, who was helping with the evacuation before she left to stay with a friend, noted that many of the residents were Eastern European Jews who were in concentration camps during World War II.

"A lot of them think they are going back to the camps," she said. "They cry and you try to explain to them what's happening. But they still don't understand."

The logistics of evacuating the patients was not the problem for Mr. Gottlieb and other directors at the 14 homes. They had elaborate strike plans, lists of volunteers, stockpiles of food and fuel, but "they're just pieces of paper" when considered alongside the possible impact on patients, he said, holding up the nearly 100 pages in which the plan was spelled out.

"In the best of circumstances a change of scene is traumatic for some one in their 80's or 90's," said Stanley Silverman, an official of the Jewish Home and Hospital for the aged, a 515-patient facility at 120 West 106th Street. Twenty-five of the homes patients were moved yesterday to another home not affected by the strike. 40 more will be evacuated today and about 100 will go home to relatives.

Sam Satler, the 81-year-old president of the homes resident council, moved around the lobby of the home where a number of the residents gathered for transportation to a Bronx home to wait out the strike. He said he wasn't bitter about the strike, just "let down and a little disappointed."

"You know," he said, "it's not very complimentary to feel that in the last few years we have to live we won't be handled like human beings. These things," he said of the strike, "should be handled by the people we trust, have faith in. They let us down."

Employees at both institutions, union and nonunion, generally blamed the state and federal government for the problems, noting that an increase in Medicaid reimbursement rates would resolve the wage dispute. Mrs. D. E. Brown, a nurse's aide, said that the residents were like family—"my residents" she called them.

"We're the only family and friends the residents have and I think this strike hurts us more than it hurts management," said Rachel Soto, a union delegate and employee in the dietary section of the Bronx home. "Here we are being something to many of these people that there own relatives won't be. We feel for the resident's but we have families to take care of too."

India to Get $80 Million Loan

WASHINGTON, July 8 (AP)—The World Bank announced today that India would receive an $80 million loan to help finance expansion of the country's telecommunications system. A two-year project will include the installation of 274,000 local telephone lines and the connection of about 220,000 direct exchange lines, a bank spokesman said.

Issues in Hospital Strike

PARTIES—District 1199, National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees representing 30,000 workers, most of whom are nonprofessionals. Thirty-three hospitals, 27 belonging to the League of Voluntary Hospitals and Homes of New York. The union has also threatened to strike 10 municipal hospitals and 14 nursing homes tomorrow.

ISSUES—The union seeks at least a cost-of-living increase, which had been recommended last month by a three-man Federal fact-finding panel. The union says that under the contract that expired on June 30, about three-quarters of its members earned $181 a week, while the highest wages, for chief social workers, ranged up to $19,000 a year. The hospitals say the proportion of workers earning $181 a week is 25 to 30 percent, and that they have no money for any increases, since the state has put a limit on Medicaid and Blue Cross payments that now make up most of the hospitals' income.

An Intricate Dispute

Hospitals Strike Involves Institutions Increasingly Dependent on Government

By DAVID BIRD

"This is not an ordinary labor-management dispute," Leon J. Davis, the president of District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees, said on Wednesday just after 30,000 of his members walked out of 33 private, nonprofit hospitals. Whatever sharp disagreements there may be in the dispute, there is no argument over Mr. Davis's statement. On the surface, of course, the dispute is not ordinary because it involves people's lives, and no one wants to be accused of causing agony —or death—among innocent patients.

News Analysis

But the dispute is also not ordinary on a deeper level because it involves private institutions that are more and more arms of the government, which now provides them with much of their incomes. It involves institutions that have grown rapidly and with little real control, especially in the last decade under government programs attempting to guarantee complete medical service to financially strained people.

It also involves institutions that, while operating in the free market, do not follow the economic laws that normally govern that market.

A Sudden Impasse

All of these differences by themselves have been tending to put the hospitals in increasingly untenable positions. Then came the city's fiscal crisis, which brought the hospitals to a sudden impasse with their employees.

The state said it could not give more money. The hospitals said without the state money they could not even negotiate. But the union said it needed at least a cost-of-living raise. No one budged and the strike resulted.

In recent years the hospitals, which traditionally had paid their workers poorly, were able to grant larger wage increases—and buy expensive new equipment as well—because they could simply pass the costs on to the government, which was paying the hospital bills for the medically indigent, and Blue Cross paying for private subscribers.

The consumer-patient ceased to pay for services directly and thus there was no sharp outcry, as there might be at the supermarket checkout, against sharply rising prices.

The cost of hospital service rose by 13 percent in 1975 alone, compared with only 7.7 percent for all the nonmedical parts of the Consumer Price Index. The cost of an average hospital stay in 1965 was $311. In 1975 it was $1,017.

Targets for Cuts

Although the continued increases in costs were being financed with increasing doses of government money, such a rapid expansion of facilities and services was bound to end even in normal times.

Since the advent of Medicaid, which provided for the medically indigent and Medicare, which paid bills for the aged, government expenditures for personal health care jumped 484 percent. The amount went from an annual spending level of $7 billion in 1965, when those programs were conceived, to $40.9 billion last year.

With the fiscal crisis, such quickly ballooning budgets were prime targets for cuts by the city and state, and hospitals that in the past had been encouraged to expand were soon being criticized for not cutting down.

By last year total expenditures on health had risen to 8.3 per cent of the gross national product, a 41 percent rise from the 5.9 per cent share of 1965. And in April a report by the President's Council on Wage and Price Stability made this observation

"Research suggests that large additional expenditures for medical care, even though they may enhance the apparent quality of care received, may be a very costly way of achieving improved national health."

Criticism Accelerates

The study suggested that other means—"such as programs to further reduce smoking, reckless or drunken driving, contamination of foods and the like" — might get more health for the dollar.

As the concern over health costs mounted the criticism of hospitals by public officials grew sharper.

"Although the hospitals involved in the strike are among the best in our state," said Dr. Robert P. Whalen, the State Health Commissioner, who controls reimbursement rates, "their aggressive individual activities have not always been in the best interest of the overall system."

Hospitals are very independent. Although they do join in groups, they are often in fierce competition. Each one seeks to have the latest equipment and the brightest superstars of the medical world on its staff.

But the classic benefit of modern equipment and competition — economy — does not occur in the hospitals.

"When General Motors buys an automatic welding machine it engages in a classic substitution of capital for labor. More cars can be produced by fewer employees," Bruce C. Vladeck writes in an analysis of "Why the Nonprofits Go Broke" in the winter 1976 issue of the magazine The Public Interest.

A Different Drummer

"But when a tecahing hospital buys a new blood analyzing machine or equips a new cardiac surgery unit, it is expanding the range or improving the quality of the services that can —at best—be performed by the same complement of personnel and that may, more likely, require the time and effort of still more expensive professionals."

In other words more equipment means more expensive staff, more tests and ends up meaning more instead of less money.

To attract the superstars and thus enhance its prestige a hospital will spend vast sums on research equipment and facilities.

"Just like the professional basketball franchise which can guarantee its future success by signing a seven-foot center from U.C.L.A., a university or medical center which adds a Nobel Laureate to its payroll identifies itself as an institution that cannot be overlooked," writes Mr. Vladeck.

"Hospitals seeking national reputations provide specialized equipment for practitioners of the most arcane subspecialties and then have to fly patients in from around the country to keep those facilities busy, while citizens of the surrounding community with more mundane ailments go underserved."

The hospitals do not necessarily agree with that reasoning.

Road to Excellence

"You're damn right we compete for the superstars, that's how quality—medical excellence occurs," said Dr. S. David Pomrinse, executive vice president of the Mount Sinai Hospital, a nationally renowned institution involved in the strike.

"Each of us tries to be better than the other to attract the best men, "Dr. Pomrinse added, "and people indeed get flown from all over the country for treatment here. But they're bringing money to New York City and what's wrong with that?"

The city and state, of course, would like to draw in as much money as they can from around the nation, but they are not sure now that they can afford to sustain that medical magnet as lavishly as they have been.

Patients More or Less Content Despite Suffolk Hospital Strike

By PRANAY GUPTE
Special to The New York Times

BAY SHORE, L.I., July 8—At Southside Hospital here today, the picketers protested and the physicians and administrators worried, but the patients hardly seemed to have any complaints.

In fact, there were several patients who reported that they were not concerned that at least 500 of the voluntary hospital's 1,500-member staff had gone on strike over wages and other issues.

"You couldn't tell the difference around here," said Dennis Doolin, a 26-year-old resident of East Islip, L.I., who recently had knee surgery. "We are treated very well indeed by them."

Surgery Unchanged

"Them" is several scores of volunteers from this mostly residential community on Suffolk County's South Shore. For the last two days they have assisted physicians in various capacities—as laboratory technicians, nursing aides and even as maintenance personnel.

"They have been simply fabulous," Dr. William Kraft, president of the 500-bed hospital's medical board, said of the volunteers this afternoon. "It is business as usual here —or almost."

By "almost," Dr. Kraft meant that instead of admitting about 140 patients into its emergency ward each day, the 60-year-old hospital yesterday took in "only" 114.

And although 18 operations had been scheduled yesterday, the hospital managed to squeeze in 32. On most days, the figure is about 34.

Still, underneath the mood of apparent calm inside the hospital, one senses concern over just how long the institution will continue to be unaffected by the strike.

The picketers outside have apparently become restless and, according to the Suffolk police, the militancy has become visibly sharper. For example, the police last night arrested two picketers for trespassing on hospital property. Today, several visitors to the hospital, as well as some workers who did not participate in the strike, said that they had been harassed by strikers.

"They wouldn't let my car through to the parking lot," said Lillian Bessenmeyer, who came to see her ailing husband, Fred, this morning. "They pounded on my windows and doors until the cops finally cleared the way."

But Anne Quaranta, a hospital technician who has been picketing with placards around her shoulders, insisted that such incidents were the exception.

"We have no intention of being violent," she said. "All we want is for the hospital to be reasonable. We are professionals and we want to go back to work—but we can't do that on their terms. Our demands must be met. The hospital must negotiate directly with us."

Shortage of Doctors Found In 86 Connecticut Towns

HARTFORD, July 8 (AP)—The State Commission on Hospitals and Health Care said yesterday that there was a shortage of certain types of doctors in 86 of Connecticut's 169 cities and towns.

The commission said a task force study had found that the scarcities involved family practitioners, general internists and general pediatricians. The commission said there were none of those types of physicians in 36 communities.

The panel also found that the average age of general practitioners in Connecticut was 58, meaning that many could be expected to retire in the next few years.

The task force said the greatest shortage of doctors was in the eastern part of the state and the greatest excess number was in the New Haven area.

The commission will conduct a hearing Tuesday at 7 P.M. at its office in Kartford to discuss possible remedies to the doctor shortage, such as encouragement of paramedical professions and gXoup practices by doctors.

Tavern on the Green—'A Creation to Appeal to All the Sen

By MIMI SHERATON

"A restaurant is a fantasy—a kind of living theater in which diners are the most important members of the cast," said Warner LeRoy, the creator and guiding light behind Maxwell's Plum and the soon-to-be-reopened Tavern on the Green in Central Park.

"It is one of the few creations that appeal to all of the senses," Mr. LeRoy continued, "and one with which I can create my own world."

As anyone who has been to the Art Nouveau spectacular that is Maxwell's Plum can easily recognize, Mr. LeRoy's world is one of lushness and opulence, exaggeration and extravagance. Even now, those same characteristics can be perceived at Tavern on the Green through the mazes of electrical wiring, open rafters, scaffolding and plastic drop cloths that wind through six rooms, two garden terraces and the sprawling kitchen of this 42-year-old public facility, which Mr. LeRoy understandably describes as "one of the world's greatest locations."

Aided by scouts and antiques dealers, Mr. Le Roy collected, over many years, most of the appointments now being taken out of wraps.

Back in his office, files bulge with research material — pictures, menus, drawings — of other great park and garden restaurants, past and present, including those famed Belle Epoque beauties, Pré Catalan and Cascade, in the Bois de Boulogne in Paris, the original Casino-in-the-Park in Central Park and the outdoor cafe that used to exist around the entrance to the Plaza Hotel.

Most of all perhaps, he was inspired by Le Coq Hardi in Bougival, outside of Paris, where terraced tables are set amidst pink, white and blue clouds of hydrangea blossoms. Flowers of all sorts will be a recurrent theme throughout the recreated Tavern. They will bloom in wood carvings and on frostily etched glass, on pink rose-sprigged tablecloths and porcelain dishes. Blue, yellow and white Venetian glass petunias will twinkle from chandeliers, and flowers, both cut and growing, will add their perfume and color, indoors and out.

In addition to flowers there will be sparkle, splinters of light refracted in mirrors and cut-glass panels, and in thousands of crystals hanging from dozens of chandeliers. There will be a leaping stag chandelier of brass and crystal, and Christmas tree chandeliers done in brass cutouts, and in one private banquet room alone, chandeliers and wall sconces will account for 700 crystal globes, ignited by hundreds of light bulbs to lend a diamond sparkle to proceedings.

"The theme in the outer rooms," Mr. Le Roy explained yesterday, "will be rustic and somewhat nostalgically New York. The Elm Room (so-called because of the elm tree that grows right through it) and the adjoining cafe-corridor dining room will be paneled in wormy chestnut that is almost impossible to get anymore, and there will be pegged oak floors and leather-like sand-colored plastic covering the banquettes. The huge carving bar will be studded with big round copper and brass nailheads, and here, as in all other rooms, there will be sparkling chandeliers and etched glass."

The glass referred to is not really etched, but, more precisely, sand-carved. Currier and Ives winter scenes of Central Park have been redrawn, then blasted into plate glass in snowy silhouettes.

"The most formal dining room will be this one," Warner Le Roy said, helping me under the scaffold set up in what will be called the Crystal Room.

Against the backdrop of an impressionistic mural of flowers, fairytale castles and animals, will be a buffet piled high with jeweled aspics, salads and pastries as richly ornamented as the ceiling. But most spectacular of all will be nine fabulous Baccarat chandeliers, created between 1890 and 1900 for two wealthy Indians—one a hemp king whose crystal collection was so enormous it took two years of weekly auctions to dispose of it when he died, and the others which belonged to the Maharajah of Baroda.

Private Rooms

"The best Baccarat chandeliers went to India," Mr. LeRoy explained. "Europeans liked theirs clear and subdued, but the Indians, with their taste for inlaid gems such as ruby, emeralds, pearls, and diamonds, liked their crystal chandeliers the same way, so the colors are unbelievably dazzling. You should see the big one for the center made entirely of emerald glass."

Three private banquet rooms, to be opened to the public when necessary, are only slightly more subdued, with solid colored tablecloths and yellow and white tenting.

Fauna, antique and reproduction, will wander throughout the rooms, corridors and gardens. Brass and copper weathervanes, a pair of small enchanting antique brass deer from Thailand, and two life-size elk, carved in wood by Paul Mozes, who came here from Yugoslavia 12 years ago to do church carvings, will be included. Having carved the backbars at La Goulue, Maxwell's Plum, L'Argenteuil and La Bourgogue, Mr. Mozes said, "Restaurants come and go, but churches last forever, so I still do church carving."

To be sure that the Tavern will be not only a feast for the eye, Mr. Leroy has also redone what was one of the largest and worst organized kitchens in New York. All equipment is new, including pizza ovens. ("We want food that's inexpensive but not of poor quality, so we'll do great pizzas," he explained.), charcoal broilers and everything else.

Because he wants the Tavern to be an inviting stop for all New Yorkers, he will have no dress regulations. "People who like to sit in elegant rooms usually like to be well-dressed, —we've noticed at Maxwell's. That may mean no tie, but they're still well-dressed," he explained. "We will seat 330 people inside, 200 out, plus another 435 in the private rooms."

The menu, too, will be planned to be inviting to all, with entrees such as crepes, pizzas, hamburgers and egg dishes starting at $2.25 and going all the way to exotic game preparations at $10 or $11. It will be strictly à la carte, so people can pay for only what they want and can share portions of side dishes.

"We'll have dishes from all over the world and in the beginning we will stick to those dishes we have learned to do well at Maxwell's. That's a large number, of course, so the menu won't be too small, and we'll add new items gradually. It will take about a year, we feel, to get the final menu shape."

While there have been critics of the new Tavern, who believe it offers no answer to the city's most serious problems, Mr. LeRoy has another view. "You need things like this for people to go to if you're going to keep the middle class in the city. And besides, this hasn't cost the city a cent."

Although the Tavern belongs to the city, it has been licensed to Hardwicke-LeRoy, the publicly owned corporation that owns Maxwell's Plum, Great Adventure in New Jersey, and several safari parks. "We pay the city a rent that amounts to 5 percent of our gross income and we paid the $2 million for refurbishing the place. We have another half-million for inventory and opening costs. The city owns all of the furniture and equipment we put in and pays for it with a small percentage deducted each year from their share of the income. We maintain it and 50 feet around it in the park."

Because it had been closed for two years, and badly neglected before that, when operated by Restaurant Associates, executives of that company fondly, if somewhat grimly, referred to this establishment as Tavern in the Red. That dismal appellation, Mr. LeRoy hopes is now part of the Tavern's history. And to that end he is bringing in 15 chefs from France, plus three from Maxwell's Plum, headed by Daniel Fuchs, a native of Alsace.

The son of Mervin LeRoy, one of the best-known directors of Hollywood in its heyday, and himself a former theatrical director and designer, all of the show business talent in Warner LeRoy's blood will come to the fore for the official opening on Aug. 31.

There will be parachutists jumping 10,000 feet, exhibition riding, circus acts, a five-foot tall bottle of champagne to be flown in from France and rigg fold, and 110,00 leased over the can find any t integrate withi Otherwise, the City Parks Dep cleaning them and trees will task. Life on Britain's Royal Yacht: Chic and Patched-Elbow Chic

Dining room aboard Royal yacht Britannia is all regal elegance...

By ANN CRITTENDEN

Her Majesty's yacht Britannia slipped quietly into town yesterday, and immediately put out to sea again for a day, providing a royal backdrop for some 100 top British and American executives gathered on board to discuss the mutual state of their economies.

Accustomed as they are to feeling like kings for a day, the assembled magnates were still obviously impressed with the gleaming 412-foot ship, which is to an ordinary yacht what Buckingham Palace is to the house next door.

With her three raked masts, royal blue hull and white superstructure, divided by a slim belt of gold leaf, the Britannia's lines are as sleek as any filly in Queen Elizabeth II's stables, and her spotless teakwood decks would be the envy of any soap commercial housewife.

Indeed, all the crew of 250 really has to do, one confessed, is maintain the 23-year-old ship in impeccable condition, down to elaborate daily displays of fresh flowers.

Within the royal apartments, however, the regal elegance gives way to the homey, patched-elbow chic of an English country house, with flowered chintz slipcovers, family photographs, and rattan settees, interspersed with the occasional relic of Empire—shark's teeth from the Solomon Islands here, a golden urn commemorating Nelson's victory at Trafalgar there.

A bolted-down piano in the corner of the drawing room is where one crew member confessed, "we have fabulous parties when the Queen's away and the Duke's on board," featuring royal equerries and secretaries and a lively piano.

All in all, as one board chairman put it as he admired a sterling silver replica of a 16th-century galleon, "a day to make you appreciate the value of a symbol."

...while living room gives way to hominess of a country house.

Making New York a Fun City for Young Visi

By CLAIRE BERMAN

Visit New York City? "If you must."

Ride the subway? "Only when absolutely necessary."

Walk through Central Park? "Not if your life depends upon it."

These preconceptions of New York are held by many out-of-towners, a good number of whom do get around to visiting the city. Some bring their children.

If Kate Pintz and Barbara Wilson have their way, it is the children who will lead their elders to an appreciation of the city as a nice place to visit and to a recognition that, for some people, it also may be a good place to live in.

Two years ago, the women founded Young Visitors, a sightseeing service for young persons from 3 years old through college age. Both had traveled widely with their own children (Mrs. Wilson has two daughters and two sons, aged 6 through 19; Mrs. Pintz is mother to 7-year-old Liza) and both had vainly sought satisfactory child care arrangements — "Not just a hotel maid who baby-sits when she goes off duty," Kate Pintz explained — when they reached their destinations.

Merit a Good Time

Surely, they reasoned, the need for such a service was great in New York, a city that last year played host to 821 conventions and consistently attracts large numbers of tourists.

"I believe that children who join their parents on business trips or at conventions should have as rewarding a time, in activities appropriate for them, as their parents," said Mrs. Pintz, a former schoolteacher. Barbara Wilson, her friend and fellow teacher, agreed. And so, after a year of research, they devised a number of flexible tours that could be tailored to the ages and interests of young people.

The two women will be very busy in the days ahead. Tomorrow evening and all day Sunday they will lead 147 4-H members from Iowa about the city.

And on Monday morning, when the Democrats take over the city, with more than 4,000 delegates and alternates attending their party's national convention in Madison Square Garden, Young Visitors will start guiding busloads of their children through a tour to include Chinatown, Radio City, the Museum of Natural History and the United Nations.

A Double Aim

The goal of Young Visitors is to entertain and educate. Of course, the children are shown all the usual tourist attractions, but they also are helped to understand the way people order their lives in the metropolis.

"When the tour bus goes past my house," said Mrs. Pintz, who lives in an apartment on the fourth floor of a brownstone around the corner from the American Museum of Natural History, "I tell the youngsters, 'That's where I live . . . and there's the school my daughter attends. That's the playground she uses.' So many of the children think New York is nothing but hotels, office buildings and department stores. It's important for them to know that the city is more than that.

"They ask a lot of questions about how city children spend their days—we tell them about the Y's—and about how much everything costs. We show them buildings in SoHo, which don't look very interesting from the outside, and describe how people live behind the facades. We explain about rents and carfare and bus passes and movie admissions. You can't get that kind of tour from Gray Line."

Roberta Rothman, national chapter coordinator of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, endorses that view. As she faced the task of planning the foundation's sixth annual conference—which was held at the Waldorf Astoria last month—not the least of Mrs. Rothman's concerns centered on the children.

"Last year," she explained, "our conference was held in Pennsylvania. The motel had a pool, game room, decent facilities. It was easy to contain, and entertain, the children."

"This year, we were dealing with Manhattan. We wanted the children to stay around the hotel for the first day. Many were to attend rap sessions on how they deal with their disease, but what would they do when they were not at the sessions? How would we entertain their brothers and sisters? And what program could we come up with for the second day, when all meetings were set up for adults?

"Luckily, Mrs. Rothman continued, "the president of our New York chapter had heard about Young Visitors. We called, and Barbara and Kate met with us to discuss our program and the special needs of our children. They obviously knew their business, and we let them take charge. It was a wise decision. The night before the start of the conference, they arrived and set up a hospitality room with all kinds of arts-and-crafts projects and games."

Equipped by Age

"Taking into consideration the ages of the children who'll be using the youth room, we fully equip it, "Mrs. Pintz said."

Mrs. Rothman said she and some of the parents were "a bit apprehensive" when the Young Visitors' organizers suggested a tour on the second day of the conference.

"Some of the parents didn't like the idea of the children leaving the hotel," she said. "The parents were worried that an excursion might be too exhausting for the youngsters. Fear of New York, while real, was of secondary concern."

But Mrs. Rothman said that both Mrs. Pintz and Mrs. Wilson were so confident "they dispelled my anxiety . . . the trip was held and it was a great success."

The cost of a Young Visitors tour is flexible. Part of it is dependent on whether the organization hiring it is willing to provide some of the necessary services. The Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, for example, used members of its own junior committee as tour assistants and also paid for a bus and driver. The Young Visitors' assessment was $6 a person and covered lunch, snacks (essential for diabetic youngsters), all admissions and the salaries of the two tour guides.

The women forward to next tic schedule. each new grou as a challenge.

"I feel that n should not take classroom," Mrs "Children should ing and touching and smelling...

For a schedule of hours and fees generally, Young Visitors can be contacted by calling 595-8100. There is still time for delegates' children to be signed up for the convention tours. In addition, evening programs may be arranged on request.

Beame Fund Case May Mention Boomis

Christopher Boomis, the real estate developer, is believed to be a major figure in the newly revealed investigation by the Manhattan District Attorney into certain contributions to Mayor Beame's 1973 election campaign, according to sources familiar with the case.

According to the sources, the investigation is focusing on the relation of Mr. Boomis to persons connected to the Mayor's campaign, including Irving Goldman, the city's former Commissioner of Cultural Affairs.

The investigation by Robert M. Morgenthau, the prosecutor, came to light this week when lawyers for Arnold E. Kagan, a financier and builder, moved to squash a grand jury subpoena for records of two foreign companies allegedly controlled by Mr. Kagan. Mr. Kagan is a cousin of Mr. Goldman's.

Christopher Boomis

Immunity Cited

The New York Times reported last March that Mr. Boomis had been granted immunity from prosecution in return for his thestimony before a Manhattan grand jury. That move stemmed from a yearlong investigation by Mr. Morgenthau's office into a contract that Mr. Boomis was awarded by the city in 1973 to build a $37 million pier and warehouse at Hunts Point in the Bronx. The contract was later canceled by the city.

It is unclear what relationship, if any, this Hunts Point investigation has with the present inquiry into Mr. Beame's campaign funds.

The sources indicated yseterday that the prosecutors were attempting to discover whether any contributions made to the Beame campaign in 1973 by Mr. Boomis were channeled, in disguise, through Mr. Kagan.

On Tuesday, Martin Gold, a lawyer for Mr. Kagan, asserted in court papers that a Manhattan grand jury had subponaed the records of two non-American corporations whose American addresses were in care of Mr. Kagan.

Corporations Roles Eyed

It was understood yesterday that Mr. Morgenthau's office wa s seeking to determine whether those corporatios — C.J.R. Corporation and the Edrit Corporation—were, in fact, "dummy corporations" that wre used by Mr. Kagan or others to "launder" money from Mr. Boomis to the Beame campaign.

In court yesterday, where Leonard Marks, another lawyer for Mr. Kagan, made a preliminary motion to quash the subpoena for corporate records, an assistant district attorney moved to have the matter discussed in privae in the judge's chambers.

In making the request to keep the issue private, Kenneth Conboy, chief of the Manhattan District Attorney's racket squad, told the presiding judge that a "serious matter" was involved and that "it is obviously in the public's interest to preserve the grand jur's confidentiality."

Mr. Conboy requested the private hearings after Mr. Marks told the judge that the inquiry "focused on contributions to the Beame campaign."

It was at this point that Mr. Conboy and an aide requested that the discussion be moved into chambers. Criminal Court Judge Robert M. Haft agreed to hear the matter in private this morning.

Oral Arguments

In oral arguments in favor of postponing the return date on the subpoena, Mr. Marks argued that the subpoena served on Mr. Kagan had violated an agreement by the District Attorney's office granting Mr. Kagan immunity in exchange for information.

Mr. Marks told the court that Silvio J. Mollo, administrative assistant to Mr. Morgenthau, had informed his law office of the investigation into campaign funds and had made an agreement not to prosecute Mr. Kagan if he cooperated.

Mr. Conboy denied that "any promises were made." In an interview, Mr. Mollo and Mr. Morgenthau declined to comment on the allegation or the investigation.

Mr. Kagan has been investigated before. As the operator of concessions at the 1974 World's Fair in Spokane, he was investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other law enforcement agencies for possible rackets connections, but no charges were brought.

Mr. Kagan told a reporter at the time that he had to be "the most thoroughly investigated man" at the fair. "The F.B.I.'s been checking me back to '37," he said. "The I.R.S. doesn't wait till the ink dries before auditing me."

6-MONTH ADJUSTING OF PENSIONS URGED

WASHINGTON, July 8 (AP)—A Senate committee recommended today that Social Security payments be adjusted for price changes twice a year, instead of annually, to help older Americans keep pace with inflation.

Inflation was described as "still public enemy No. 1" for elderly persons in the annual report of the Special Committee on Aging.

Senator Frank Church, Democrat of Idaho, the committee chairman, said that older persons faced a "desperate struggle," in which more and more items that had been "musts" had become "maybes" or "not-at-alls."

The Republican minority of the committee conceded that the 23 million persons over 65 had "many unmet needs in income, housing, job opportunities, health care, nutrition, recreation, education and transportation" but said "important progress" had been made in the last year inf ighting the rising cost of living.

The minority cited a 12.2 percent increase in the Consumer Price Index between December 1973 and December 1974 as against a 6.1 percent increase from March 1975 to March 1976.

Investigator Says Seepage Caused Idaho Dam Break

BOISE, Idaho, July 8 (AP)—The Teton Dam in eastern Idaho collapsed June 5 because water seeped into its embankment and eroded it, but pinpointing how it happened will be difficult because much of the evidence was washed away, the chairman of an investigating committee has reported.

The chairman, Wallace Chadwick of Los Angeles, wrote Gov. Cecil D. Andrus and Interior Secretary Thomas S. Kleppe yesterday that direct evidence of what caused the failure was apparently swept away when the dam failed.

The collapse released 80 billion gallons of water stored in a reservoir behind the dam. The flooding caused damage estimated at $1 billion and took 11 lives.

Officials of the United States Bureau of Reclamation estimate that a 40-by-300-foot segment of Teton Canyon's north wall was swept away, in the first such failure in a dam erected by the bureau.

Arts and Sciences Academy To Build New Headquarters

Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, July 8—The American Academy of Arts and Sciences, which now operates from a 19th-century house in suburban Brookline, announced today that it would build a permanent national headquarters at Science Park, a state-owned tract of land on a dam. across the Charles River, between Boston and Cambridge.

Funds for the modern, four-story building will come from an $8.5 million gift from the Rowland Foundation Inc., which is controlled by Mr. and Mrs. Edwin H. Land. Mr. Land, the pioneer of instant photography, is chairman of the board of the Polaroid Corporation, of Cambridge.

The 2,200-member academy, a private, nonprofit organization chartered in 1780, conducts research on international issues, publishes the quarterly journal Daedalus, and awards several prizes annually in literature, physics, medicine and the social sciences.

Project at White Plains Attracting Buy

By ALAN S. OSER

WHITE PLAINS—A low-rise condominium development that the Robert Martin Company is building here offers further evidence of the growing popularity of such housing.

The project is called Hillside Village—110 for sale units near the perimeter of the White Plains urban renewal area on a slope adjoining a community of private homes. So far only the elaborate sales pavilion is up. But Robert Martin, which has built nearly 20 percent of all the 3,900 condominium units in Westchester County, expects to break ground next month and finish the construction by late fall next year.

In just one weekend of accepting $50 nonbinding reservations from buyers a couple of weeks ago, 96 of the townhouse units were spoken for, said Martin Berger, one of the principals in the company. There were also 41 "backup" reservations if those in the first group choose not to buy.

Typically, said Mr. Berger, half of those who reserve a unit change their minds. Nevertheless, the response indicates to him a strong pentup demand for housing, "properly priced and located." Since Westchester construction has slumped sharply in recent years—to the point where the Builders Institute of Westchester can look forward to a future pace of 1,000 to 1,200 units a year as "normal" after around 6,000 units a year in the 1960's — the conclusion is not surprising.

Hillside Village represents a decision by Robert Martin, Westchester's largest condominium builder, to locate its new residential projects here, one of the country's more urban areas, rather than in other suburbs. There are to be 650 units of midrise construction on an adjoining site as the next phase of construction.

"In the last few years we have lost nearly all our zoning attempts in the suburbs," said Mr. Berger. "We have decided it is expedient to return to urban areas where we are welcome."

The 96 reservations show that 70 percent of the potential buyers—68 families—come from Westchester

An arrow marks the construction site.

County. There are also four from Manhattan, eight from the Bronx, and others from Brooklyn, New Jersey, Connecticut, Long Island, Queens and Rockland County.

"Our pull from New York City is not nearly so strong as it was in the past," said Mr. Berger. "I have the feeling that a significant portion of the people who want to leave New York have already left. We aren't pulling from places like Riverdale and Forest Hills the way we used to."

A year ago, when the Hillside Village site had a different sponsor and architect, the construction plan was for 82 units of housing in two large, low-slung structures built along the hillside with garaging underneath. The housing units were to be stacked in Indian-pueblo fashion, with the open roof level of each housing cluster serving as the floor of the next.

The Robert Martin design, by Matthew Warshauer, an architect, calls for 19 separate buildings of four to eight duplex and single-level apartments, with landscaping and steps and pedestrian bridges connecting them. "It will look woody," said the architec. Mr. Berger called it "California style." In any event, it will not be the masonry construction that is more familiar in the urban environment, said Mr. Warshauer.

The offering statement for Hillside Village has yet to be approved by the state attorney general's office, but a preliminary price schedule has been issued. It shows estimated monthly costs of $352 to $408 for one-bedroom one-level units costing $40,-a month for two-bedroom 500 to $47,250; $434 to $481 one-level units costing $49,-600 to $55,350; $523 to $556 a month for two-bedroom, two-level units costing $60,000 to $63,750; $524 to $568 a month for a different two-bedroom two-level model costing $60,000 to $65,250; and $536 to $583 a month for the three-bedroom two-level units costing $61,000 to $66,750. The monthly figures are before estimated income tax deductions, and are based on a 30-year, 8½ percent mortgage.

Rent Stabilization

Two researchers who did a 1975 report for the Rent Stabilization Association on the effects of the city's rent stabilization program made public an updated rent study this week.

It reported that the economic situation of both stabilized and controlled housing had deteriorated "significantly" since 1973. Among the findings for stabili ing were the follc to 20 percent is in cash flow position; age net rental inc clined by 11 percen 1973 and 1974, an cline continued into between 1972 and 1 ments on stabilize ties dropped in all except Manhattan.

AVAILABLE SUMMER 1976!

Our beach can still be yours.

If you hurry.

A few choice Ocean-front apartments are still available for Summer 1976 delivery at Yardarm Beach, the condominium resort in nearby Westhampton Beach.

However, we expect these apartments will not be available for long. It's understandable.

Here you can relax completely. All exterior maintenance in the hands of a professional staff. So you'll have more time to spend on the broad, 600-foot wide private beach, perfecting your backhand on one of our tennis courts or your backstroke in our pool.

Or, you can just listen to the sound of the surf and the cry of the gulls while sitting on your private terrace overlooking the Ocean.

This condominium community was designed as a year-round retreat that blends with the dunes and drifting clouds. Yet, beneath the natural textured wood is a rock-solid core of concrete and steel construction.

And considering the tax advantages and the savings, you can own a very special place in the sun for less than the price of a season's rental.

Isn't this the lifestyle you've earned for yourself? Come, visit our newly decorated model apartment today. Our beach can still be yours. If you hurry.

The New York Times
Governor Carey

nally, Louis J. Lefkowitz, the state Attorney General, dismissed Mr. Nadjari two weeks ago after the prosecutor denounced Justice Grumet and threatened to subpoena the Governor.

'Exoneration' Candidate

In an interview in his Capitol office the other day, Governor Carey reflected on the legislative session and his term so far. His mood was relaxed and low-key. But there was an edge to his voice when he talked about the Nadjari affair, which left the state Democratic Party in disarray and effectively killed whatever chance Mr. Carey might have had for a place on the national ticket.

"I ought to run for President on the exoneration ticket," he observed. "I'm the most exonerated man in the United States."

The Governor agreed with those who have said that the Nadjari episode had cast a pall over the past six months of the administration.

"It does impair your ability to govern," Mr. Carey said. "People who might be trying to secure for public service say, 'Wait a while and see how this thing turns out.' That's part of it. The other part is, if you're dealing from strength you can get more things done—if you're dealing with, let's say, a Legislature. But if they say, 'Boy, that guy's in a peck of trouble, we don't have to listen to him,' it doesn't give you enough clout."

"You're not left without wounds," the Governor concluded, almost inaudibly. Asked to repeat what he had just said, he did so, adding quickly: "Certainly the wounds will heal, and there's no hemorrhage involved."

Mr. Carey was satisfied with the session and proud of what he clearly regarded as the year's main accomplishment—the continued solvency of the state, and its agencies, school districts and local governments.

"You never get everything you want," he said. "One definition of a Legislature is a body that deals with unfinished business. But the subtle and the less-flamboyant, less-apparent work that had to be done was achieved."

During the interview, Mr. Carey stressed at several points how difficult the fiscal rescue had been, and dismissed as "a cheap shot" the comment by the Senate's majority leader, Warren M. Anderson of Binghampton, a Republican, that he had been an "absentee Governor."

"Nobody's had to hold down two jobs," he said, mentioning his chairmanship of the State Emergency Financial Control Board for New York City and his position as Governor of the state. "Those were not all surface-type spectaculars that indicate on the stump or in front of an audience what's going on.

"It took a lot of tenacity, a lot of determination, a lot of perseverence, because there were so many people who believed we couldn't make it. We had the rug pulled from under us so many times that I said the only way we're going to make it through is on a magic carpet."

An Exhausting Experience

During the interview, the Governor left little doubt that the entire experience had been an unexpectedly exhausting one.

"I didn't expect to have to become a financial wizard and a fiscal expert," he said.

He recounted a story someone else had told him about a young girl struggling for a long time to pull a weed from the ground.

"Finally, the weed came loose and they said, 'My, my, that was very difficult, wasn't it?' And she said, 'Why wouldn't it be difficult, the whole earth was pulling against me.' So sometimes that's the way it seems."

"There's something else that people forget," Mr. Carey continued. "There is a family involved. There's very little gratification to a family having a father that has to be bouncing down to New York City and bouncing back to Albany. If anything I'm an absentee father, not an absentee Governor.

Those who have watched Mr. Carey for the last year and a half say that at least some of his difficulties were of his own making, that it need not have taken the catharsis of the overriding of his veto to teach a 14-year member of Congress the importance of good relations with the Legislature.

"He did fine at the end," one longtime Democratic aide to the Legislature said of the Governor's legislative relations. "But he wasn't putting his mind to it half the time. He didn't seem to get the pace of the Legislature. It's a collection of special-interest groups. It has to be stampeded, pushed, prodded by a Governor, but it's as if Carey has made up his mind not to play it that way.

"Sure he's the leader of all the people, but he's also a party leader, and sometimes you have to accommodate one group or another the way Rockefeller did. There's nothing so wrong with that."

A Quality of Diffidence

"He's not a closer," one senior Democratic legislator said durig the session's hectic last days. "He doesn't seem to enjoy being in there at the close for the final head-knocking and the feet to the fire. His staff has gotten much better at it, but it helps to have the Governor there too."

There is a quality of diffidence about the way Mr. Carey has handled his office that puzzles legislators accustomed to the dramatic flair of a Nelson A. Rockefeller, who dominated their lives for so long.

"Carey does what he thinks is right, but he's not able to convey that to people, so he doesn't gain the full credit for it," one Democratic Assemblyman said. "He seems to have faith that if he does what is right he'll be respected for it, but it takes more—it takes selling yourself, a little sugar coating."

Some members of the administration express the same exasperation.

"He tells the world about saving an agency the same way another Governor would talk about letting a highway contract," one said.

But other aides disagree that Mr. Carey's style is a drawback.

"It's a very studied, calculated policy," one said, based on the judgment that the cooperation of the Senate Republican leadership, essential for the fiscal rescue, would be jeopardized if a Democratic Governor sought to claim personal credit.

But the Governor's stance appears to others to reflect not so much a cool political judgment as something inherent to his personality, a need for distance and privacy that has kept him a stranger to the state even as his face and name have become more and more familiar.

He seems to take pride in the loneliness of the office. "I don't play to the balconies," he repeated twice at his most recent news conference. "I'm not seeking plaudits. I'm not going to grandstand. I'd like to be judged as a Governor who met the hard decisions head on and made them. There is no place in that for a popularity contest."

Keenan Is Opposed to Sharing Power With District Attorneys

By SELWYN RAAB

John F. Keenan, the new special state anticorruption prosecutor, said yesterday that he was opposed to sharing jurisdiction with the city's five District Attorneys in cases involving corrupt acts in the criminal-justice system.

Mr. Keenan, a former top aide to two Manhattan District Attorneys who had fought for concurrent jurisdiction with the special prosecutor's office, said: "As a given proposition, I am not going to surrender jurisdiction."

At a luncheon-meeting with editors and reporters of The New York Times, Mr. Keenan also said that his office might have to become a permanent unit as a "watchdog" and "deterrent" against misconduct by judges, court personnel and the police.

Indictments Reviewed

Major points made by Mr. Keenan yesterday, nine days after succeeding the controversial Maurice H. Nadjari as special prosecutor, included:

¶"No investigations are stopping or grinding to a halt" because of the removal of Mr. Nadjari.

¶Mr. Keenan is personally reviewing 180 indictments obtained under Mr. Nadjari's administration to determine if there is sufficient evidence in each matter for a trial and if his office has legal jurisdiction.

¶He pledged that this office would be "very active and hopefully very productive" but there would be no "quotas" for indictments or convictions.

¶Within eight months, he hopes to clear up the current backlog of 180 indictments obtained by Mr. Nadjari.

During his lunch of baked filet of flounder with cream sauce, Mr. Keenan refused to make a direct assessment of Mr. Nadjari, who served almost four years as the first special prosecutor. But he alluded critically to Mr. Nadjari's public battles with other state and city officials.

"Unfortunately, the office became too personalized," Mr. Keenan asserted. "If the office is to work effectively, it has got to be handled in a professional way where personality is not the key issue."

The 46-year-old Mr. Keenan further said that he would institute a training program for assistant prosecutors who were inexperienced as trial lawyers. "This was not in effect when I took over," he commented.

Mr. Keenan, once a colleague of Mr. Nadjari's in the office of the Manhattan District Attorney, also seemed to question Mr. Nadjari's frequent warnings that there was widespread corruption within the judiciary.

"I'm not going to start off by making blanket-type accusations," Mr. Keenan said. "It's not my style to take pot shots at judges. But if I find corruption anywhere, I'm going hellbent for convictions."

Mr. Keenan, an assistant district attorney for 19 years in Manhattan and Queens, said the office of special prosecutor was needed because of the apparent reluctance by the District Attorneys to investigate judges and the police. In recommending the establishment of the special prosecutor's office, the Knapp Commission on police corruption said in 1972 that the District Attorneys had neglected these areas.

2 Opposed Prosecutor

Two Manhattan District Attorneys, the late Frank S. Hogan and the current one, Robert M. Morgenthau, vigorously opposed the exclusive criminal - justice corruption jurisdiction granted the special prosecutor, which thereby reduced their powers.

Mr. Keenan, who served under both Mr. Hogan and Mr. Morgenthau, said there was "no need for concurrent jurisdiction." Governor Carey, Mr. Keenan noted, agreed to continue his office until the end of the Governor's term in 1978, and Mr. Keenan expressed hope that the office would be made permanent.

In reviewing the 180 unresolved indictments, Mr. Keenan estimated that 15 might have to be transferred to the district attorneys because of a recent appeals court ruling that excluded the special prosecutor's office from investigating Civil Court matters. Mr. Keenan indicated that because of this ruling the indictments of Justice Irving Saypol of State Supreme Court and Surrogate S. Samuel DiFalco of Manhattan might be turned over to the office of the Manhattan District Attorney.

Except for Blues, Few Fish Running

Charter and party-boat skippers from New Jersey north to Cape Cod should probably hire a songwriting team to praise the bluefish, for without the species most of the boats would go bankrupt.

Blues, many of them 10 pounds and better, are now all along the coast in large quantities as far north as Cape Cod, although in many instances the angler has to go off shore for them.

Striped bass are somewhat scarce, and some observers believe that they have noticed a dearth of small and medium-sized fish, which does not augur well for the seasons ahead.

AREA A—Capt. Andy's at Margate, N.J., reports plenty of big bluefish being caught off shore by day and night chummers. Fluke fishing is spotty and a few king mackerel to 11 pounds had been caught near Avalon Shoals. At Surf City, N.J., the one bright note is that beach fishing for fluke is now quite good. Occasional weakfish and stripers are also being caught. Blues are extremely scarce along the beach. Rick's Tackle at Seaside Park, N.J., reports a few stripers being taken off the Barnegat Inlet jetties and in the inlet itself on bait, alive and dead. A few fluke are along the beaches. Bluefish are extremely scarce close to shore. Ken's Landing at Point Pleasant, N.J., says offshore day and night chumming for bluefish continues to be excellent, and that a few fluke are along the shore.

AREA B—Striper fishing is still quite good, says Giglio's Tackle at Sea Bright, N.J., and fish to 30 ponnds are being caught on rigged eels and menhaden. Blues are spotty, but fluke are everywhere in good numbers. Weakfish running from 4 to 6 pounds appeared in the area Wednesday. Captree State Park reports good fluke fishing from boat and pier, a few striped bass being caught off Gilgo and Cedar beaches, and some winter flounder off the piers.

Area C—Captain Ande's at Mastic Beach, L.I., says small fluke and bluefish are quite common. Weakfish to 5 pounds are about, but not plentiful, and a few porgies and blackfish are being caught. Nick's Shinnecock Marina happily announces much offshore activity with bluefin tina from 60 to 100 pounds, many white marlin sighted and some caught, and good shark fishing including a 328-pound mako and a 305-pound thresher, the latter caught bh Ron Braun of Hackensack, N.J., aboard Capt. Jim Farrell's Jamie II. Braun fought th shark for 1 hour 10 minutes and it fell 2 pounds short of the world record for the line weight he was using, 30-pound test. In shore, small bluefish are in the inlet and with the full moon approaching, fishing for stripers there should improve also. Offshore fishing is getting better day by day, according to Tuma's and the Montauk Marine Basin at Montauk. Small "football" bluefin tuna have been brought in, as well as some specimens to 60 pounds. A 52-pound yellowfin tuna was boated recently, many white marlin have been sighted, as well as swordfish. Bluefish are plentiful, particularly off the southwest corner of Block Island. Stripers are not common, but can be taken by both trolling and plugging. Shark fishing is good; Capt. Walter Haab of the Secon IV recently boated a 400-pound dusky, and several makos have been taken on rod and line.

AREA D—Porgy fishing has been good near the so-called "abandoned lighthouse," and weakfishing is improving at the Brickyard, says the Port of Egypt Bait Station at Southold, L.I. Saturday, the port's substation at Orient Point will be open for business. Good fluke and blackfish are reported there.

AREA E—Fishing is reported to be slow by the Westport, Conn., Tackle Shop. School stripers are being taken on bottom rigs with worms, but some of the fish are below legal size. A few fluke and porgies are being caught. Anglers with depth recorders are marking what appear to be large schools of bluefish in the middle of Long Island Sound in about 90 feet of water, but they are almost impossible to catch. Bass and bluefish are in the Race, and weakfish are being caught off the Thames River and Seaflower Reef. On the opposite side of the Sound in Smithtown, L.I., fluke are still present in good quantities off Stony Brook and Nissequogue inlets, says the E-Sea Tackle Company.

AREA F—Male Town in White Plains says that some medium to large stripers are being caught by bait fishermen off the sshore at Stamford and Greenwich. A few fluke re reported and there has been fair luck with weakfish on worms near Buoy E off Greenwich Point.

Two Pairs Share Medal On 66's in Anderson Golf

By DEANE McGOWEN
Special to The New York Times

MAMARONECK, N.Y., July 8 — Richard Siderowf, the British Amateur champion, and his partner, Howard Kaskel, both of Doral, were among the favorites as the Anderson Memorial four-ball invitation golf tournament opened today.

But they shot a 68 as 95 two-man teams competed for 31 qualifying spots. Meanwhile, Aldo Butera and John Parsons of Ridgewood and Dick Doetsch and Tom Jung of the host Wingd Foot Club shot 66's and shared the medal.

The match-play event, the 40th annual one, was started in 1931 by John G. Anderson, a long-time member of this club.

Anderson was a finalist in the United States Amateur in 1913 and 1915 and he won the Westchester amateur championship four times—1917, '18, '25 and '26. Following his death in 1932, Winged Foot named the tournament in his memory.

Last year's winners, Neil Christie and John P. O'Hara of Winged Foot, the youngest pair ever to win the event, drew a bye for today's qualifying (medal) round. But their beaten opponents of a year ago, William Dober and Alan Helfer of Birchwood, were in the field and shot a 67.

The 6,664-yard, par 71 East Course is known as a "tight" course. It is well lined with rough and trees, compelling competitors to hit straight all the way. It is not for "sprayers" who wander all over, unless they can recover for a respectable score.

The leading scores took the first 25 qualifying places with cards ranging from 66 through 69. Fifteen other teams tied at 70. They will stage a sudden-death play-off for the remaining six spots tomorrow morning, teeing off from the 11th hole at 7:30. After that, the 18-hole morning round tnd 18-hole afternoon round will take place.

The tournament, which attracts the leading Eastern amateurs, will consist of four rounds of 18 holes each tomorrow and Saturday with a 36-hole final scheduled for Sunday.

The Doetsch-Jung pair carded its five-under-par effort with four birdies in a front-nine 32, and another birdie on the back nine. They had no bogeys.

Teen-Ager Leads Women's Golf

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

SPRINGFIELD, Pa., July 8 —Connie Chillemi, a wonderfully enthusiastic 18-year-old professional golfer, says "Gee Whiz" and "Wow" and "Weeee" and even creates her own expressions such as "Jippity-Jumpity," which she uses to describe herself. translated that means "happy go lucky."

Miss Chillemi also hits a golf ball a long distance and on target as she proved today by taking the lead in the first round of the United States Golf Association's Women's Open championship at two under par 35-34—69.

Unwilling to estimate her eventual chances in the 72-hole tourney Connie said, "I just play old man par and I got him two down right now."

She also had the field by a stroke as Sandra Palmer, the 1975 champion, and Mary Lou Crocker, a tested professional, were right behind at 70.

These three were the only women to break par on the difficult Rolling Hill Country Club course.

After Miss Chillemi and 81 other golfers had finished their first rounds and 69 were still on the course, heavy rain accompanied by lightning interrupted play for 1 hour 45 minutes. But when play resumed no one was able to catch the early leader.

Play was suspended at 8:30 P.M. because of darkness with 21 golfers still out. None of these, including Jo Ann Prentice, seemed a threat to the young leader. These remaining players will complete their first round at 8 A.M. tomorrow while the second round starts from the first tee.

Miss Chillemi's lead was considered secure, with Miss Palmer and Miss Crocker so close and Carol Semple and JoAnne Carner only two strokes back at par 71. Miss Semple, the 1973 United States Amateur and 1974 British Amateur champion, who is still an amateur, shot 35, 36—71 and Mrs. Carner, who won the Open in 1971, had 37, 34—71. Mrs. Carner began the round by hitting into traps on three of the first four holes.

Miss Palmer, the defending champion, also trailed a little-known first-round leader in 1975 when Nancy Lopez, a freshman at the University of Tulsa, was the front-runner for two rounds. Miss Lopez, an amateur who tied for second last year, is a close friend of Miss Chillemi's. She was the only one to run up to the young player from Orlando, Fla., today and give her a big hug and wish her the best for the remainder of the tournament.

Miss Lopez, the 1974 U.S.G.A. girls champion, is about as vivacious as Miss Chillemi. She had just shot 40, 339 — 79 when she greeted her friend from amateur competition.

Miss Chillemi apparently has the game that is needed to win at Rolling Green especially if she keeps her long shots on target. This course, just under 6,100 yards, plays long because of the lush fairways and rough. It plays tight because the fairways are carved through thickets of trees. Waves and slopes in the fairways allow for few flat lies. It's a difficult course for the 151 women, who started play today.

The young "jippity-jumpity" leader turned professional last January. She attended the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour school but failed by two strokes to get her tour card. So she went on a women's mini circuit known as the Group Fore Women's tour where she won eight of 10 tourneys, six of them in a row.

She dropped out of the University of Miami after one semester last fall and will try again for an L.P.G.A. tour permit at next week's school in Bloomington, Ind.

She comes by her talents somewhat naturally since her father Nick Chillemi is the pro at Cypress Creek Country Club in Orlando. Her brother, Nick Jr., is the assistant pro. Her oldest brother, Tom, is the pro at West End Golf Club in Gainesville, Fla.

Miss Chillemi is long distance hitter, a rarity among women, and she employs a No. 1 iron, a rare weapon for the women. In fact, she carries only two woods — a driver and No. 3.

... does not intimidate ...nen; he terrorizes them. ...idation he saves for the ...le half of his mixed dou... partnerships. For the ... he will glower, fume ...sputter, cry out in rage and despair; yet he is in control of himself.

After meeting him at Wimbledon, John McPhee, an author, was moved to near poetry. "He appears to be," wrote McPhee, "a panatela ad, a triple agent from Alexandria, a used-car salesman from central Marrakesh."

Yawn TIER-ree-ack is the bandit chieftain of the tennis world. With the backhand of a man using a letter opener, he has, over the years, had to polish other skills. He has the rare distinction of having been the last tennis player suspended — not fined — by the International Lawn Tennis Federation and the first in World Team Tennis to be fined.

Officials are the blight of his life, but not without reason. Tiriac's success stems not from talent but from the drudgery of working and practicing. Tiriac did not begin tennis until 17, whereas most pros start at 8 or 9.

"I was never very talented you know," he recalls. "Everything I did I was working for, working for every day, 300 days a year." Where others can live with the inevitable incorrect line calls, Tiriac cannot. After working so hard for the point, it just kills him to have it taken away.

"Situation is hopeless, hopeless," he laments. "Umpires and linesmen make mistake after mistake.

"I played in Phoenix and the last match in the mixed doubles was crucial for winning. They made a mistake, was kind of a yard in and they call it out. So I went to the head referee and he say, 'Mr. Tiriac, you perfectly correct, I'm going to put it in the report.' I say, 'What the hell you talking about? You take the point away from me I am going to lose the match. I don't give a hell if you put in the report or not. The rules say you are entitled to change it.' He say, 'Yes, but I wouldn't do that, that's a nice boy over there. But you are perfectly correct.'

"W.T.T. say not to change the calls because it makes too much of a mess. So they are keeping it like a syndicate; you don't change my call and don't make me look bad, and I don't change your calls. So that's it and the one who suffers is the player."

His teammates idolize him because he cares so much. When there is a point in dispute, he rises from his bench to protest. At every service break he flies to administer towels and advice. He supervises every phase of the team, from practice sessions to the details of the uniforms.

When there is no match, Tiriac schedules practice. "We've probably had three days off the entire season," said John Alexander, his doubles partner. What happens if a player skips practice? "I

HoltzmanStops White Sox, 6-0

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY

The Yankees and Ken Holtzman took just 1 hour 50 minutes of the Chicago White Sox's time last night to record a 6-0 victory at the Stadium.

Holtzman, a man of few words and fewer pauses between pitches, stopped the Sox on seven hits for his second victory and first shutout as a Yankee.

"I had good control," said Holtzman, puffing on a cigarette after the game. "I kept the ball down, changed speeds, made them hit my pitch."

The Yankee offense, which had been lagging of late, was provided by Roy White's three-run homer, a clout by Oscar Gamble, a single by Sandy Alomar and a bad throw by Chet Lemon of the Sox from center field.

White also got a standing ovation from the crowd of 14,545 with a diving catch of a dep drive by Bill Stein in the fifth inning. White raced for the ball in the spacious gap in left-center and just reached it with his dive.

"It just kept hanging up there," the left fielder said. "It looked so far ahead of me when I started out I didn't think I'd even come close."

Though Holtzman was not overpowering — he gave up five doubles among the seven hits, several of which were impressive shots—his control and change of pace kept the Sox in check.

The left-hander described his changeup as a "backup" pitch. "I take a little bit off my fastball, so it's maybe three-quarter speed," he said. "That's the name of the game —keep the hitter off balance."

Five of the Yankee runs came off Rich Gossage, the loser. The sixth was off John (Blue Moon) Odom, purchased from the minors this week by Chicago.

Gossage, selected as Chicago's representation to the American League All-Star squad, had not started since June 24 because of a sore elbow.

Seemingly unable to pitch anywhere but inside to left-handed batters, Gossage got into trouble in the second inning when he walked Graig Nettles and hit Gamble with a pitch with two outs. Alomar grounded a single over second and Lemon threw wide trying to get Nettles at the plate. The throw bounded off Nettles's side and into the Yankee dugout, allowing Gamble to score, too.

White's homer, his eighth of the season, came after Jim Mason and Mickey Rivers had singled in the seventh. It was a healthy drive into the bleachers in right-center.

"I got jammed," White said with a smile. "The ball was carrying well tonight out that way. I've hit some balls better this year that didn't go anywhere."

Is a 19-year-old golfer worried about leading one of the major tournaments of professional golf, ahead of some of the world's best players?

"No," he answered, "mas contento."

Ballesteros's late-afternoon finish undid the temporary second-day dominance by such American stars as Johnny Miller, Hubert Green and Ray Floyd, not to mention mighty Jack Nicklaus and Tom Weiskopf.

His 138 gave him a two-stroke lead over Miller, the 1973 United States Open champion and winner of 14 other tour events, who had led for most of the day at 69—140.

Green, winner of three consecutive American tourna- ments earlier this season, added a 70, which included a double bogey, to yesterday's 72 for 142. There he was tied with Christy O'Connor Jr., one of the first-day leaders, who shot 73 today.

One stroke behind, at 143, was Floyd, winner of this year's Masters, who finished birdie-birdie for 67, tying the course record set earlier in the day by Carl Higgins of Dallas. Also at 143 were Tommy Horton of England, who finished birdie-birdie-eagle for 69, and Brian Barnes, the pipe-smoking Englishman who has special permission, because of the heat wave to wear Bermuda shorts on the course.

Jones Notches 16th Triumph As Padres Down Cubs, 6-3

By THOMAS ROGERS

"I think 16 wins is enough work for half a season," said Randy Jones yesterday after scattering seven singles on the way to a 6-3 triumph over the Cubs in Chicago. The San Diego Paadres' left-hander hurled his 15th complete game in 21 starts and won for the 16th time in 19 decisions.

Rather than pitch again on Sunday in search of his 17th victory, Jones would prefer to rest and be the starting pitcher for the National League in the All-Star Game Tuesday night in Philadelphia.

Manager John McNamara of the Padres said he would not use Jones against the Phillies Sunday unless the outcome of the game was in the balance and he needed a shore relief stint from his ace.

Jones, who only two years ago lost 22 games with the Padres, is aiming to become the National League's first 30-game winner since Dizzy Dean achieved that plateau in 1934. Denny McLain of Detroit was the last American League hurler to break the 30-victory barrier, winning 31 decisions in 1968.

In triumphing for the fourth straight time and for the 11th time in his last 12 decisions, Jones snapped a four-game Chicago winning streak. He struck out six and walked two.

"I was a little shaky and lost my rhythm a couple of times, but I was able to battle back," he said. "I thought I had a pretty good sinker today. It was breaking a lot. I thought some of their batters were staying away from the ball, so I just took a chance and came in over the plate a few times."

The Padres, who had been shut out by the Cubs in three straight games, scored four runs in the third inning to make things easier for Jones. John Grubb, Tito Fuentes and Dave Winfield singled for one run.

Seaver Wins, 5-2; 4-Run 5th

By PARTON KEESE

Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, July 8—Tom Seaver is ready to take on the American League.

Showing much of the form that won him two Cy Young awards and nine nominations to the National League All-Star squad, Seaver pitched the Mets to a 5-2 triumph over the Atlanta Braves tonight at Atlanta Stadium.

In posting his ninth victory against five defeats, Seaver struck out eight Braves to run his league-leading strikeout total to 127. He gave up just six hits, two in the last inning, as he continued his mastery over the team he has beaten 21 times in 27 decisions.

Matching One-Hitters

"I felt terrible coming out of the bull pen after warming up," he said, "but suddenly the ball started hopping from the mound. I had six of my strikeouts in the first five innings, but then the heat and humidity, running from first to home on Mike Phillips's triple and not getting to bed last night until 4 A.M. started cutting into my strength."

The Mets had flown here from Houston immediately after last night's game with the Astros, arriving in the early-morning hours.

Frank La Courte (pronounced LaCorty) started for Atlanta and matched Seaver inning for inning, one-hitter for one-hitter, through four innings. Then looping singles by Ed Kranepool and Bruce Boisclair into right field and LaCorte's throwing error on Ron Hodges's bunt led to four Met runs in the fifth. With Seaver in top form, they were more than enough.

Wayne Garrett, who missed the three games in Houston when he flew to his ailing father's bedside in Sarasota, Fla., returned tonight and contributed what proved to be the winning hit, a two-run single. Phillips, who also contributed a single and triple, batted in another run.

The Braves used four pitchers in an effort to catch up, but all they succeeded at

"Ebby Gerry gave her to me," he said yesterday. "She was out of the Old Farr family, and when I bred her to Kimberley Kid she produced a good one, Meadow Farr, a two-minute trotter that won around $150,000 at 2 and 3. I bred Meadow Farr to Star's Pride and got Meadow Bright, who won about $60,000 as a 2-year-old. I owned her with Hugh Grant.

"She had won about $30,000 more last year when I had a call from John Simpson, who wanted to buy her for the Hanover Shoe Farm. I told him, 'I've just put a price on her for the Italians—$200,000 less 10 percent commission, that's $180,000.' John said, 'How about $175,000?' And I said, 'You've got her.'

"He left her with me, and she took a world record of 1:57 2/5 for 3-year-old trotting fillies and also won more money than any other 3-year-old trotting filly, somewhere around $200,000 for Hanover. So the way it worked out, she cost them nothing." (Meadow Bright's complete record for 1975, racing for her original owners and for Hanover, shows 19 victories in 29 starts with earnings of $234,553. She was recognized as America's filly champion.)

But She Found Time

"She was good this year up to April, when she got a splint that developed into an inflamed tendon. You don't race a good horse that's sore. The good ones, when they tell they have had it, you respect them. So I called Simpson, 'John,' I told him, 'this mare is too good to race sore. There's no telling how long she'll be this way so I think you ought to breed her, so you don't miss a year.' He agreed.

"I had a vet examine her and he said. 'She'll be in season two days from now,' so I vanned her down to Hanover in a hurry and April 8 we bred her to Speedy Count, the sire of Delmonica.

"For a while after that she had some skin soreness but I was jogging her and she kept getting better and better. The other night I drove her in the American Trotting Championship at Roosevelt and she won handily in 2:01 4/5. She picked up $25,000 and qualified as one of the eight to go in the International. She pulled up just perfect. I don't think she's ever been better than she is right now, and I know she is three months gone."

Meadow Bright drew post position four, two outside of France's Bellino II, the favorite. The International is a mile and a quarter, a bit farther than trotters in America are asked to go on most occasions and a searching distance for unborn foals. Even if Meadow Bright doesn't win, the experience over a distance of ground should be good for her child.

Tareyton improves.

Charcoal is why.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency reported that charcoal is the best available method for filtering water.

History's No. 1 filter:

Charcoal helps freshen air in submarines and spacecraft, mellows the taste of fine bourbons and aids in auto pollution control.

Activated charcoal does something for cigarette smoke, too.

While ordinary filters reduce tar and nicotine, they also remove taste. Tareyton's unique two-part charcoal filter reduces tar and nicotine—but the taste is actually improved by charcoal.

5 Reds To Start For N.L.

Joe Morgan, last season's most valuable player, heads a list of five players from the world champion Cincinnati Reds in the starting lineup of the National League in the 47th All-star game at Philadelphia next Tuesday night.

Morgan, who emerged as the top vote-getter in both leagues with 3,079,082, was named yesterday as the National League's starting second baseman for the fifth straight yeaar.

Morgan will be joined by teammates Pete Rose at third base, Dave Concepcion at shortstop, Johnny Bench, catcher, and George Foster in the outfield in starting lineup. The final figures were Baseball Commissioner's office.

Others named to the starting unit are Steve Garvey of Los Angeles at first base and Greg Luzinski of Philadelphia and Dave Kingman of New York in the outfield.

The closest balloting by the fans in the National League was for shortstop. Concepcion narrowly beat Larry Bowa of Philadelphia. Concepcion received 2,130,721 votes to 1,941,092 for Bowa. Luzinski emerged as the top vote-getter among the outfielders with 1,946,379 with Kingman edging Bake McBride of St. Louis for the third outfield berth.

The National League later announced in San Francisco the reserve squad selected by manager Sparky Anderson of Cincinnati, who will be in charge of the All-Stars. Four Philadelphia players are in the group as well as two more from Cincinnati and two from the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The reserve squad by teams: Philadelphia: Larry Bowa, Dave Cash and Mike Schmidt, infielders, and Bob Boone, catcher; Cincinnati: Tony Perez, infielder and Ken Griffey, outfilders; Los Angeles: Ron Cey and Bill Russell, infielders; Chicago: Steve Swisher, catcher; Houston: Cesar Cedeno, outfielder; Pittsburgh: Al Oliver, outfielder, St. Louis: Bake McBride, outfielder.

Anderson also announced that Danny Ozark of the Philadelphia Phillies and John McNamara, manager of the San Diego Padres, would serve as coaches. He named one of his Cincinnati aides, Russ Nixon, to act as batting practice catcher with Carroll Beringer of the Phillies serving as batting practice pitcher. Don Seger of the Phillies will be the team trainer with Cincinnati's Larry Starr assisting.

was putting an end to John Milner's consecutive-game hitting streak at 13. Though he went 0 for 4, Milner made a fine running catch with two Braves on base and nobody out in the sixth.

"That was a savior, all right," Seaver said. "But I have a theory on that. It wasn't so much I was weakening, but rather a part of the normal sequence of a baseball game. This I believe in—that is, that three or four times in the course of a game, an opponent will have chances to score against you. You've got to expect it, and if you can stop those moments, then you become a winner."

The Braves were held to just one run in that sixth inning, despite getting three hits. Seaver's other weak moment came in the ninth when Rod Gilbreath led off with a single to short, advanced to second on a throwing error by Phillips and scored on Ken Henderson's single to center.

Henderson also came within a yard of a home run in the fifth when he sent Boisclair to the center-field fence 402 feet away. "I was trying to strike him out then," laughed Seaver.

As for next Tuesday's All-Star Game, Seaver said he didn't expect to start and that the honor should go to Randy Jones of San Diego.

However, Dave Kingman, the Met right fielder, will start in the outfield in the All-Star Game. How does he feel about it?

"I'm looking forward to the train ride to Philadelphia and seeing the Liberty Bell," Kingman said.

20 W.F.L. Refugees Seek Giant J

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE
Special to The New York Times

PLEASANTVILLE, N. Y. July 8—The New York Giants opened their training camp today with 73 candidates, 20 of whom are refugees from the World Football League, which went out of business last November. Fifteen of these 20, including Larry Csonka, played for the Memphis Southmen, who have also contributed two assistant coaches to Bill Arnsparger's staff, John McVey and Jay Fry.

The Giants hope to have pulled a coup on the rest of the National Football League by signing five-sixths of the Memphis offensive line. Csonka and the other newcomers, who included a dozen who have had prior N.F.L. experience and 23 rookies, 14 of whom were drafted, were at the training site on the campus of Pace University for physical examinations. Workouts begin tomorrow and the 44 holdover Giants from last season's team, which won 5 games, report on Tuesday.

The Giants have more former W.F.L. players than any other N.F.L. team save the Redskins, who have 28 in camp at Carlisle, Pa.

Guard Eager for Chance

Tom Kruyer, a big blond guard from South Bend, Ind., chose to talk about his feelings as a refugee from the league that went under. "I'm not here just for the exercise," he said. "The Giants expressed a real interest in me. I view the possibilities of making this team as real. I'm going to get a fair chance and we'll see what happens. It's that simple."

Kruyer is 26 years old, an alumnus of Indiana who played briefly in the Canadian League and then gave up football for a trucking job in Los Angeles. Fry, who had been his coach at Indiana, brought him into the Memphis scene in 1974 and that is where he became a pro football player and allegedly a good one.

Kruyer, Charlie Bray, a 29-year-old guard who played in Canada for five seasons, and Ralph Hill, a 26-year-old center, were the middle of the Memphis line that blocked well for Csonka, when he was not hurt, Jim Klick and Willie Spencer. Klick is now with Denver and Spencer with Minnesota.

The Giants' priority is to rebuild the offensive line so as to give the team a decent running game for a change. Can Kruyer, Hill and Brae who were never drafted by N.F.L. teams, make the team and be significant contributors?

"They wouldn't be here if we didn't think so," said Arnsparger. They come with strong recommendations and they have been inspected thoroughly on films of the Memphis games. "What we don't know," said Arnsparger, "is how good the players were that they went up against. We'll find out here in camp and in the preseason games."

When the holdover Giants arrive there will be 100 athletes in camp, 10 of whom are kickers and punters and six quarterbacks. Since no squad limit has been set as yet for the coming season by the N.F.L. owners, the cuts will come slowly. go of those who wayside," the c "Otherwise I'll ho players as long as home Fuentes and Winfield. Ivie stole second, went to third on a balk and scored on Bill Bonham's wild pitch.

Jones worked out of trouble in the third inning after three straight hits had brought home a Chicago run. He retired Jose Cardenal on a called third strike, then fed Bill Madlock a low pitch that the Chicago third baseman hit to start an inning-ending double play.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Red Sox 8, Twins 4

AT BOSTON—Carl Yastrzemski drove in three runs with his 15th homer and a single. He hit only 14 home runs last season. Carlton Fisk broke out of a prolonged slump with three hits—a single, double and triple—and drove in a pair of runs. Fred Lynn reached base five times with a single, double and walk, and hit two balls that were mishandled for errors. Rick Jones worked five innings and picked up his second major league victory. Reggie Cleveland allowed the Twins no hits over the final four innings, and the crowd of 25,970 sent the Red Sox's home attendance over the million mark for the 10th straight season.

WEDNESDAY NIGHT
AMERICAN LEAGUE

A's 5, Orioles 3

AT OAKLAND—Sal Bando drove in two runs with a single and sacrifice fly while Don Baylor, Joe Rudi and Gene Tenace each batted in a run in leading the A's to a 5-3 victory.

It was Oakland's fourth straight victory for the club's longest winning streak of the season and it put them one game over .500.

Rollie Fingers pitched 2 2-3 innings of shutout relief to gain credit for his 12th save, while the victory went to Paul Mitchell, who gave up all three Baltimore runs in 6 1-3 innings. Mike Cuellar suffered his 10th defeat in 14 decisions.

Twins 8, Brewers 2

AT MILWAUKEE—Mike Cubbage hit the first grand slam of his career to back the combined four-hit pitching of Bill Singer and Bill Campbell. Cubbage's blast, his first homer of the season and only the fifth of his major league career, came off Bill Castro to cap a five-run uprising in the eighth that gave Minnesota a 6-1 lead. Butch Wynegar also singled home a run during the outburst and singled home another run in the ninth. Singer got credit for the victory, raising his record to 8-3.

Tigers 2, Rangers 1

AT ARLINGTON, Tex.—Bert Blyleven hit Ben Ogilvie with the bases loaded, then Rusty Staub drove in the deciding run with a sacrifice fly in the eighth inning to give Detroit the victory. In his last four starts Blyleven, now 6-10, has gotten just two runs from his Ranger teammates, but he won those games on 1-0 shutouts.

Angels 2, Indians 0

AT ANAHEIM, Calif. — Bobby Bonds drove in both runs with a homer and a double to back the five-hit pitching of Nolan Ryan, who earned his seventh triumph against nine losses. Ryan struck out 10 and lifted his major league-leading total to 152 in pitching the 26th shutout of his career. Bonds cracked his 10th homer in the first inning and doubled across the Angels' second run in the third, sending Rick Waits, a rookie, to his fourth loss in six decisions.

But the Spaniard regained control on the incoming nine. Royal Birkdale is an oddly imbalanced course, with a par of 34 on the front side, where there are no par-5 holes, and a par of 38 on the back nine, where there are four big par-5's, all over 500 yards long, in the last six holes.

After a birdie 3 with a 6-foot putt on the 11th hole, Ballesteros tore up those four par-5's. He carded four birdies, and two of them were within inches of being eagles.

Ballesteros reached three of those par-5 greens in two, and his second shots were made with a 1-iron to the 542-yard 15th, a 3-iron to the 526-yard 17th, and an "easy" 5-iron to the 513-yard 18th.

Yesterday, Ballesteros said he was worried that today would be windy: He doesn't like wind because he hits a high ball. Today brought only a light breeze—"no wind" to Ballesteros. Furthermore, he had spent two hours last night in the pro shop adjusting the loft of his irons for lower trajectory.

He is so young that apparently he has not learned much about pressure. When asked if he felt pressure today, he said no, the only thing he was trying to do was to extend his lead.

Had this 19-year-old pro ever shot better than 69, 69 in the first two rounds of a tournament?

"In Spanish National, I make 63, 67" he answered, "and I finish win."

Weiskopf, sensitive to the fact that he is an honored guest in a country he likes, went to some pains to make certain that golf fans had not misunderstood his comments last night about the conditions at the Royal Birkdale Golf Club.

He emphasized that he had meant that only "some" of the grens were the "worst" he had played on. He also explained that he had not said that in criticism of the course, but as a reality, and that he sympathized with the people who are trying to keep the greens alive in this combination of record drought and 90-degree heat.

He is on his most diplomatic behavior these days, and has gone out of his way to be friendly with everyone. Still, the Weiskopf "temper" got considerable notice in the British press today, and he explained his attitude — patiently and without rancor.

"I've never been fined for throwing a club or using profanity," Weiskopf said. When I get mad, I am mad at myself because I am a perfectionist. It is emotion rather than temper. I have a great talent, and when I make mistakes, I get down on myself.

"I think the press has given too much attention to my temper because there has to be a reason why I'm not winning all the time. I'm the guy with the perfect swing and the talent, and there must be some reason I'm not winning. So it must be my temper, right? I must have that label for convenience.

"We work ourselves to a fine edge, and you ask questions to get controversy, something different. That's fine, but it's my temperament that gets me going."

Associated Press

Arnold Palmer raises his putter over his head in anguish as he misses a putt on the ninth hole at the Southport course.

8 Birdies in a Row for Zoeller

MOLINE, Ill., July 8 (AP) Fuzzy Zoeller shot a course-record 63, including a tour record eight straight birdies, to take a one-stroke lead over George Archer after the first round of the $100,000 Quad Cities open golf tournament today.

Mike McCullough, Bob Dickson, Gene Frank and Carlton White were two strokes behind at 65 on the par-71 course.

The 24-year-old Zoeller carded a par 35 for his first nine holes at the 6,305-yard Oakwood Country Club. But he used only 28 strokes—eight under par—on his blistering back nine. He shot a par 4 on No. 10, then rattled off eight straight birdies to tie the Professional Golfers' Association record set by Bob Goalby at the 1961 St. Petersburg open.

After the first nine holes, Zoeller said, he had no idea "that I was about to break loose." He bogeyed only two holes.

The 147-man field will be cut to 70, plus ties, after tomorrow's 18 holes.

Most of the big names on the tour were competing in the British Open. Roger Maltbie, last year's winner, had a 69. Archer was on a comeback after wrist surgery in April, 1975, which kept him out of action for several months.

"I've shot three good rounds in the last three weeks," he said. "That's very encouraging." He birdied three holes on the front nine and four on the back, parring the remainder.

Foreman, King Unite

George Foreman, the former world heavyweight boxing champion, disclosed yesterday that Don King would promote his future fights. Foreman mentioned Jimmy Young, a controversial loser to Muhammad Ali in April, and Howard Smith, a California heavyweight, as possible opponents.

"I got to keep active," Foreman said. "I got to keep my position stable."

Foreman recently registered a fifth-round knockout over Joe Frazier under the promotional auspices of Jerry Perenchio and Caesars Palace, but the former champion said that he had aligned himself with King now.

"I don't need a contract," King said. "George's word is good enough for me."

Jenkins Rides 5 Winners At Lake Placid's Show

Special to The New York Times

LAKE PLACID, N.Y., July 8—Rodney Jenkins, 31-year-old professional rider from Orange, Va., was so busy that he had trouble counting his blue ribbons.

When the final returns were in at the Lake Placid horse show, the red-haired Jenkins had ridden five winners—one in the open jumper division and four in the hunter classes.

His most notable triumph was in the time first jumpoff section of the open jumper competition. He piloted Mr. Demeanor, owned by Tom Rumberger of Winter Park, Fla., to victory, the 8-year-old brown gelding's second in two days.

Mr. Demeanor beat out the Canadian equestrian team's Brother Sam, handled by Ian Millar, and the Argentine team's Simple, ridden by Roberto Tagle.

Mr. Demeanor, whom Jenkins has been riding less than five months, was timed in 43.1 seconds to 44.9 for Brother Sam and 45.6 for Simple. Nine horses were clean in the jumpoff.

WHY PAY THE PRICE OF A VOLVO AND NOT GET ONE?

As you can see, by the time you've added the options you want to the average car, you've spent a lot more than the manufacturer suggests.

But why end up with an average car when for about the same money you can have a Volvo?

Volvo not only offers standard equipment that other car makers charge extra for. Volvo also offers standard equipment that many car makers don't offer at all.

Things like rack and pinion steering. A fuel-injected overhead cam engine. A 12-outlet heating and ventilation system that also defogs the front side windows. Orthopedically-designed bucket seats that have become legendary for their comfort. And 4-wheel power disc brakes with dual triangular circuits that give you about 80% of your stopping power even if half the brakes should fail.

On a Volvo, safety is also standard. Even the U.S. government is impressed. In fact, they're buying 24 Volvos for a crash-testing program that will help establish safety standards for cars of the future.

Volvo offers one more thing, which Road Test magazine has summed up nicely: "...proven engineering and a car that will last longer than most." (Latest figures from the Swedish Motor Vehicle Inspection Company show that Volvos last an average of 16.6 years in Sweden.)

So if you're considering cars like Cutlass, Granada or Aspen, you owe it to yourself to consider one of our Volvos.

There's no better way to see how much these cars are missing than to see how much Volvos have.

Immediate Delivery

Getting away from it all?

Don't let it all get away from you! Have The New York Times mailed to you on your vacation this year.

A vacation subscription to The Times is so easy to arrange...particularly if you already have home delivery of The Times. Just call your home delivery dealer...at least two weeks before you leave. He'll take care of everything. Just give him your vacation address...tell him how many weeks you want The Times by mail...and when you'll return.

Your home delivery dealer will also arrange to have your delivery service resumed the day you get back home.

All mail subscriptions are mailed before midnight on the day prior to publication. If you're not going to be too far away, you could have your Times on the very day of publication. In any case, you'll receive The Times just as quickly as it can go through the mails.

Keep up with The Times and all its bright and lively features by having it come along with you on your vacation. Call your home delivery dealer.

Or...if you prefer, mail the coupon below...at least two weeks before you take off. Send no money now...we'll bill you later. Please be sure to include both your vacation address and home address on the coupon.

Taiwan Athletes Confident In Departing for Montreal

TAIPEI, Taiwan, July 8 (AP) — Twenty members of Taiwan's Olympic team left for Los Angeles today en route to Montreal. They expressed confidence that the International Olympic Committee would permit the team to compete in the Summer Games, which start July 17.

Four yachting competitors have already moved into the Olympic Village despite Canada's decision that they will not be allowed to compete unless they drop the name "Republic of China."

Canada acted after the Chinese Government in Peking had asked that Taiwan's athletes be barred. Canada switched its formal recognition to Peking from the Nationalist Chinese Government on Taiwan in 1970. China refuses to compete in the Olympics as long as Taiwan is represented, and has asked for Taiwan's expulsion.

Other members of Taiwan's team of 42 athletes and nine officials are expected to meet in California, where 14 are undergoing last-minute training. Other Taiwanese have been training in Japan, Korea and Spain.

An official of Taiwan's Olympic committee said:

"We never had any official notification from Canada regarding its decision to bar us from taking part in the Montreal Games, or displaying our national flag and playing our anthem."

She Chia-ming, president of the committee, said the Canadian Government's decision was "entirely unexpected." He stressed that under I.O.C. rules, the host country had no right to alter the names of I.O.C. member nations.

"As we have been officially recognized by the I.O.C. as the Republic of China Olympic Committee, we will certainly compete in the Games under that name," he added.

The I.O.C. is insisting on allowing Taiwan to compete with no restrictions.

A New Olympian 'Psychin

By FRANK LITSKY
Special to The New York Times

PLATTSBURGH, N.Y., July 8—Four years ago, when Kathy McMillan was in eighth grade in Raeford, N.C., she was the star of the physical education class. She was long jumping 12 or 13 feet and as she recalled today:

"My coach said to me, 'If you work out winter and summer, you'll make the Olympic team some day.' He could have been kidding, but I believed him. I didn't even know what the record was or how far I could eventually go."

The coach was a good prophet. This year, Kathy McMillan made the United States Olympic team, broke the American record and was graduated from high school. She is a strong candidate for an Olympic medal, and at least one European expert thinks she will become Olympic champion two weeks hence in Montreal.

She is here with other members of the American men's and women's teams for training and processing for the Olympics. After a morning workout, she sat by the side of the track and talked about her progress.

"I've been adding two feet every year," she said. "In ninth grade I jumped 16 or 17 feet, in 10th 18 or 19 feet, in 11th grade, 20 or 21 feet and this year 22 feet so far. I'm 18 years old now. I'm 5 feet 7 inches and 125 pounds, and I'm stronger. I guess I had natural ability, but I had to learn form. I'm still not getting much extension at the end of the jump, and I'm working on it."

Last month, in the Amateur Athletic Union national outdoor championships, she set an American record of 22 feet 3 inches. A week later, in the United States Olympic trials, she twice jumped 22-3, each time with excessive wind. Only Sigrud Siegl (22-11¼ and Angela Voigt (22-8½), both of East Germany, have jumped farther this year, and each did it with a world record.

"I was nervous at the trials," Miss McMillan said. "I hurt my left hamstring two days before while exercising, and I could hardly walk. I was afraid I realized that all my good jumps before that wouldn't get me on the team. I had to do it there."

Now that she has done it there, she has to do it in Montreal.

"My biggest problem — making the team — is over," she said. "Now all I have to do is concentrate and not let myself get psyched out."

An athlete wants to psych up—to get confidence and adrenaline flowing. An athlete does not want to get psyched out—to have confidence destroyed by someone or something.

"I was psyched out once," Miss McMillan said. "My first big meet was the 1975 A.A.U. indoor championships at Madison Square Garden. I suddenly realized this was the nationals and this was the Garden, and I got tight. I didn't know how to handle the pressures. I had been jumping 21 feet, but all I could do was 19 feet."

Tiriac Brings Heart, Jaundiced Eye and Gypsy's Soul to Tennis

don't know," says Alexander, "no one dares not to come."

For years Alexander was a regular partner of Phil Dent, who is a better shotmaker than Tiriac. But Alexander has no complaints about playing with his coach.

"He's very steady," Alexander says. "I always know he's going to get the ball back over the net. It's a secure feeling. And you know he's trying 100 percent. He's never played any other way."

Tiriac and Ilie Nastase, his countryman, were inseparable for many years. Although Nastase is the better player, it was Tiriac who brought tennis to Rumania. In that Communist country the game had been considered aristocratic and therefore suspect. That was before Tiriac, who dances to his own gypsy tunes, thundered down from Brasov in the Carpathian Mountains.

Hockey Is Shunned

He had been an outstanding hockey defenseman for Rumania in the 1964 Olympics and through four world championships. He left hockey for good after the Olympics.

"I could see the boom coming even then," he says. "I left ice hockey probably because of it."

He was Rumanian singles champion from 1959 to 1966. He arrived at his peak in singles in 1967, reaching the semifinals of the Italian open, the quarters of the French and Italian in 1968. In 1970 his doubles skill began to bloom, and with Nastase he won the French and Italian championships and was a semifinalist at Wimbledon. But it was into the Davis Cup that he poured all his energies.

It is difficult for Americans to understand how important the Davis Cup is to Europeans, but it has been the focal point of Tiriac's life. In all the years before Tiriac, Rumania had won just one match. He has played for Rumania every year but one since 1957, and is third on the list of most matches played in Davis Cup competition.

Nastase and Tiriac are no longer doubles partners, no longer friends. "I will not comment on Nastase," Tiriac says. Tiriac was Nastase's coach, father and protector. Nastase responded to the one thing Tiriac respects: hard work.

"In those days I would leave him on the court at 2 o'clock and tell him to hit serves until I returned," Tiriac recalls. "When I come back three hours later, he would still be hitting serves. Nastase worked like a crazy man in those days."

Tiriac, however, is not one to lament. He moves on. He is fluent in nine languages: Rumanian, French, Italian, German, Spanish, Hungarian, Russian, English and Grunt. He is equally as comfortable discussing politics as debating forehands and backhands —a rarity among players. He served four years on the board of the Association of Tennis Professionals as the European representative.

It is to Tiriac that the young Europeans look for help and advice during their first frightening sojourn on the American tour. His keen mind is able to spot the future champions: Bjorn Borg, Manuel Orantes, Guillermo Vilas, Adriano Panatta.

Tiriac has begun to involve himself in other collateral business deals. He is touring pro for the Virginia Beach Club, and next year will promote three prize-money tournaments to be televised on CBS.

Tiriac will be a commentator on these matches. He did that kind of work in Europe during the Masters, and if American audiences miss some words because of the accent, the remainder are so enlightening and entertaining that it won't matter.

How to Broadcast

"Listen," he says, "I tell you altogether the best commentator is Bud Collins, but the rest are terrible. Bud is a great guy and Julie Heldman is a smart girl. But they don't really get out everything that they can from a tennis match. They are commenting on the point after it is played. I think they should get involved more in the point coming. Anticipating what the player is going to do, how they feel on the court at a certain moment of the match, and how they are going to react. That makes it more for the people.

"It is different for somebody like me who lives 20 years in this game and plays against the players on the court, and know how they think. That's how you can translate to the people—put them closer to the court. To put them into the match, make them feel the match."

According to his friends, Tiriac has mellowed somewhat. Once an extraordinary womanizer (he has been divorced since 1969), he treats women as if removing Adam's rib were God's personal favor to Tiriac. For the last year, however, he has been living with one woman, and they may even have been secretly married.

His attitude toward tennis, however, has not mellowed for he still loves it and cares about it. But his Lorster contract runs out this year, and he may not renew it if he can't put up with the officiating. Were the league to lose Tiriac, it might lose its spirit.

What it means to be a professional athlete in America...
...by an insider who really knows!

Bill Bradley. Princeton graduate. All-American. Rhodes Scholar and New York Knick. Now this multi-talented athlete celebrates a life in sports, in his own words, displaying all the humor, pressure, rewards, emotional highs and lows that mark the career of a professional in American sports.

"This honest book belongs on the shelf next to Jim Bouton's Ball Four . . . This is fascinating stuff." —Newsday

"It's a good book. Well worth reading." —The Wall Street Journal

". . . has to rank as one of the finest sports books in a long time." —NBC News

"Bill Bradley has produced a remarkably searching, smart book that will be irresistible not just to those close to professional basketball but to anyone interested in the experience of the professional athlete." —Newsweek

"Bill Bradley has written a marvelous, evocative portrait of his profession." —The Chicago Sun-Times

A Welcome to the Queen

The welcome presence of Queen Elizabeth II, reigning monarch of Great Britain in direct line of descent from King George III, gives a special touch of grace to this nation's Bicentennial. New York, a city that the soldiers of her ancestor once occupied, extends to the Queen and to her husband, Prince Philip, an especially warm greeting on their arrival here today for a tantalizingly brief visit.

In a few simple remarks, spoken in Philadelphia earlier in the week, the Queen paid the spirit of the American Revolution a most eloquent tribute. If the Founding Fathers "taught Britain a very valuable lesson," as Queen Elizabeth said, it is as true that these philosophers and statesmen of the American colonies drew their lessons of political freedom and liberal democracy primarily from the Mother Country, from the ideals of John Locke and the British political philosophers of the seventeenth century.

Moreover, though it is sometimes forgotten in the foreshortening of history, the American colonists commanded outspoken support and admiration in eighteenth-century Britain from many courageous opponents of the restrictive and repressive policies of the King and his Tory ministers.

Edmund Burke, most eloquent of all of America's friends in Parliament, begged the Government "to leave the Americans as they anciently stood. . . ." In the year of the Declaration of Independence, the Reverend John Wesley toured small towns of England and reported those in which "the inhabitants . . . have entered into a resolution not to suffer any among them to enlist for the purpose of enslaving their American brethren."

Ringing statements of Whig opposition sounded through the halls of Parliament even as the war raged. The dying Earl of Chatham, William Pitt the elder, told the House of Lords in 1777: "If I were an American, as I am an Englishman, while a foreign troop was landed in my country, I never would lay down my arms—never—never—never. You cannot conquer America."

The King and Government of the day failed to hear these sentiments, to their eventual sorrow. But the monarch of today aptly summed up what the revolt of the thirteen colonies has meant to Britain: "We learned to respect the right of others to govern themselves in their own ways; this was the outcome of experience learned the hard way in 1776."

This lesson holds pointed relevance for the particular tragedies of United States foreign policy in the decade just passed, and for the new challenges of diplomacy in an interdependent world. With the tolling of the Bicentennial Bell, gift from Queen Elizabeth and the British people, we Americans not only may recall that lesson learned by the British after 1776 but also—in a larger sense—the heritage of freedom and self-government, of liberty and democracy, that we are fortunate enough to share with Britain and but a handful of other countries throughout the globe.

Choosing Number Two

Governor Carter's choice of a running mate, whoever he turns out to be, will have been made with far more care, deliberation and advice than generally go into the selection of a Vice-Presidential candidate. Partly this is a consequence of the undisputed claim on the nomination that the former Georgia Governor was able to secure a month or so before the Democratic convention, which opens next week. But it is to his credit that he has taken advantage of the interval to give full attention to a problem that rarely receives the serious consideration it demands.

Usually a Presidential nominee indicates his preference a day or so after his own nomination, his chief concern being an ideologically and geographically balanced ticket. The choice is then whooped through by a weary convention, eager to adjourn.

That method has rarely been a service to a major party, let alone to the nation. In seven of the last ten elections (not counting 1972, when both Presidential nominees had running mates from Maryland) Vice-Presidential choices brought so little strength to the losing side that they failed to carry even their own states.

If the method was tactically a failure, it was morally worse. Just four years ago it gave the country, initially, the possibility of an emotionally unstable President and in fact a very narrow escape from a felonious one.

If time is what allows Mr. Carter to make a sounder approach to a matter of prime importance, then time is what should always be provided. What can be more charged with importance than picking a man who, at any hour, as recent history has so amply demonstrated, may find himself President of the United States?

Among the many proposals that have been made in the past few years to provide that time and care, one of particular novelty is the proposal offered a few years ago by Senator Robert P. Griffin. The Michigan Republican would have the President-elect submit his choice to Congress, which would have the right to confirm or reject, just as it did when it filled the vacant office, first with Gerald Ford and, later, with Nelson Rockefeller. Aside from eliminating the "balanced ticket" folly, it would assure a more thorough consideration than is possible with a last-minute convention choice.

Other proposals are less extreme and probably more democratic: to have the convention nominate a Vice President before it makes its Presidential choice; to require that each Presidential candidate name in advance his preferred running mate; to allow an extra convention day for nominating a Vice President. These have varying degrees of merit—and of deficiency.

Any proposal for change in this vital aspect of the American political system must obviously be studied with the greatest care; but care is not synonymous with procrastination. Until reform is accomplished, successful Presidential candidates who have not enjoyed Mr. Carter's pre-convention interlude will have no choice but to fall back on a system that has proved irresponsible at best and at worst a danger to the Republic.

Las Vegas East?

New Jersey forged ahead last week in a race that no citizen with the interests of his state at heart could want that state to win—a race to establish the first eastern rival to Las Vegas as a haven for casino gambling. The Legislature in Trenton has completed action on a constitutional amendment that would allow casino gambling by local option in Atlantic City if approved by the voters in the general election this fall.

A broader measure legalizing casino gambling statewide was soundly defeated in a referendum in Jersey two years ago. Similar legislation died in Albany this year because many legislators rightly feared public reaction.

Gambling proponents, however, never stop trying. Some Times Square business interests and upstate resort owners, like their counterparts in Atlantic City, persist in the illusion that gambling casinos will somehow restore their tarnished image and spur economic redevelopment.

The impact is more likely to be just the opposite. Police officials have repeatedly warned that casinos would attract the worst criminal elements, including organized crime, and would create serious law enforcement problems. Jonathan L. Goldstein, U.S. Attorney for New Jersey, called the initial casino proposal "an open invitation to every con artist and flimflam operator to come here and prey on our citizens."

A recent study by the Legislative Institute of Baruch College found that the introduction of casinos would have a relatively modest economic impact in New York, especially in New York City. An earlier study conducted under the auspices of the Twentieth Century Fund and the Fund for the City of New York reported that legalized gambling of all kinds "will produce relatively small amounts of revenue and will raise it from the wrong people in the wrong way." In regard to casino gambling, the report observed that "there is substantial evidence that this kind of economic development is purchased at high cost."

High cost to the community and the general public, that is. But there could be a big payoff for gambling interests. It is a good bet that they will be pressing hard—and spending heavily—to gain a favorable vote in New Jersey next fall, and that if they win they won't be satisfied for long to restrict their operations to Atlantic City, or even to New Jersey.

New Jersey voters have another fight on their hands to keep the scourge of casino gambling at bay—a fight in which New Yorkers share a vital stake.

In the Nation's Service

Higher education, paralyzed by budget deficits, seems to be in the throes of an identity crisis over its diminished national role. Recognizing the implications, Ernest L. Boyer, chancellor of the State University of New York, has called for a new "public partnership" between the campus and the non-academic world. Instead of making the legally required issuance of a 1976 Master Plan for SUNY merely another routine projection of statistics, Dr. Boyer has chosen to outline a course designed to put SUNY—or for that matter any major university—back into the center of public affairs.

His prospectus aims at recapturing for higher education the role it has played so spectacularly since passage of the Land Grant Act of 1862. In view of present passivity in Washington toward the universities, Dr. Boyer stresses the crucial need for "aggressive leadership" from within the universities in reponse to a dangerous lag in research in many essential fields.

In the spirit that at another critical juncture inspired Woodrow Wilson to speak of the university "in the nation's service," Dr. Boyer proposes:

- An Office of Public Service to coordinate service activities throughout the state with a view to making SUNY's resources available to help solve state and local problems;
- A University/Industry Panel, representing academia, business, industry and labor to develop programs to stabilize and strengthen the state's economy;
- A University/Social Agencies Panel to improve the impact of the university's teaching and research on state and local social and health services.

Underlying Dr. Boyer's planning is the view that the inevitable slowdown in the universities' physical growth and enrollment in the years ahead ought not to be seen as a threat to higher education's future but rather as an opportunity to shore up and redirect the universities' public service and to revitalize the quality of teaching and research. The nation's academic spokesmen might be better able to rally public support for their hard-pressed institutions by setting such goals than by concentrating on recitations of their fiscal ills.

Such a call to action could be a valid test of any candidate's perception of national needs in the forthcoming Presidential election campaign. Can the next occupant of the White House ignore the urgency of taking the universities out of the mothballs and putting an end to higher education's debilitating depression?

Letters to the Editor

How to Save Our City's Parks

To the Editor

New York City built great parks, which are now everywhere in decay. "Bryant Park: An Oasis Plagued by Crime" (news story June 26). Central Park, vulgarized, each Sunday marijuana sold openly and crowds of hustlers gambling at the Bethesda Fountain; the world-renowned Terrace in near ruins. Why is City Hall asleep?

Scenes of deterioration in our historic parks, litter strewn everywhere in the streets, a subway system scarred by vandals whom an uninspiring Mayor is too enfeebled to curb, all degrade New York. This is the sordid quality of life which corporations leave far, far behind in their stampede to get out.

The Mayor panics at the money shortage and an elusive Federal bailout, and is blind to the moral crisis, the gross failure of leadership and of will. The best professionally qualified men are still not appointed to key posts in the administration as the city-scape declines.

As for Bryant Park specifically, it can be saved, but only with a major civic effort like those which created our great parks in the first place.

The Republic National Bank, American Standard, both in landmark buildings, face Bryant Park on 40th Street. On the other side of the park are W. R. Grace & Co. and a string of retail shops, including the famed Tepee Town. Lane Bryant and Rogers Peet are on Fifth Avenue, and Dundee Mills, New York Telephone and Union Dime at the other end of the park on Sixth. And there are literally scores of well-established firms with offices in buildings facing all four sides of the park.

All these might well band together to underwrite the cost of a permanent security patrol for the park, which is, after all, a front garden for all of them. The shared cost, added to what they now spend to safeguard their own premises, would be a modest charge, with so much at stake not only for Bryant Park and for them but for all New York as well.

This may even set a pattern for corporations, banks and families of wealth which work and live on upper Fifth Avenue to revive the glories of Central Park, once New York's greatest attraction and foremost pleasure ground.

American business and distinguished citizens must take the lead again, as they did when our great metropolis was built, if New York is to be saved.

Danger in Greenwich Village

To the Editor:

A Times news article today raises the question as to whether there is youth gang activity in the Village. Whether gang or not, I do not know, but criminal youth activity exists.

In February, as I was unlocking the entrance door to my apartment house, my left arm was suddenly wrenched and my handbag taken. I turned to see three young boys, about thirteen, eleven and nine, running off.

Last Friday night, at 11, as I was approaching the door, I was suddenly pushed violently from behind, and my handbag again wrenched from me as I fell. I was lucky enough to be able to stand, as a young boy, not more than 13, ran off with it.

This, to just one individual, in a period of four months. Something is definitely dangerously wrong

From Garbage to Energy

To the Editor:

Several stories in The Times of June 26 relating to the garbage disaster on Long Island beaches clearly illustrate much of what is wrong with our society. Government officials on all levels scurry around making foolish statements, hoping to save their own necks, and if possible place the blame elsewhere.

Meanwhile, buried in the financial news a small item announces the granting of a patent to a man who developed a process for production of hydrogen by the incineration of waste. What could be more sensible than solving two problems at once by converting garbage into energy?

However, these are political decisions that have to be made, and as long as power rests where it does in this country, we will continue to react by frantically raking beaches instead of getting to the heart of the matter.

A 'Cordial' Reception

To the Editor:

I cannot allow to go unchallenged the attempt by Andrew Hatcher (quoted in a July 2 news article) to identify me with what be described as the "politely hostile" reception accorded him by the audience at a dinner given last week by the Harlem-based organization 100 Black Men.

Since my role, unlike that of Mr. Hatcher, was not that of a paid apologist for the Government of South Africa, I was in fact given a politely cordial reception. Had I known of Mr. Hatcher's recent appointment, I would have spared myself the embarrassment of appearing on the same platform with him.

A Case for the Fast Breeder Reactor

To the Editor:

Your editorial of June 19 on the plutonium danger, recommending the bypassing of the fast breeder reactor for power generation, clearly points out The Times is misinformed in this technology. The same size fast breeder reactor produces less plutonium than present-day commercial reactors, and in operation it burns up plutonium that is charged into the reactor as fuel. The fast breeder is the most efficient reactor for consuming and disposing of plutonium.

Plutonium that is produced in power reactors is highly contaminated with radioactive isotopes and would require highly skilled terrorists to handle with special remote-handling equipment. This contaminated plutonium cannot be used for "grapefruit-size bombs," and in fact there is no U.S. experience in building bombs with power reactor grade plutonium. Your concern about plutonium being lethal is refuted by the thirty years of experience in handling thousands of pounds without any known deaths.

The simple facts are that the plutonium barn door is wide open. Fast breeders are being built now by all industrialized nations, such as the U.S.S.R., France, Germany, Japan and the U.K. This technology is not secret, and even developing countries will within a few years have the skills to build fast breeders.

The reason for this accelerated pace in developing fast breeders is the undeniable fact that this earth is running out of fossil fuels, and alternate sources of large quantities of energy, such as fusion and solar, are uncertain. Whereas fast breeders are proven and approaching commercialization, fusion energy is still to be demonstrated, and solar energy power plants, as presently designed, consume almost as much energy to build than they produce over their life. This nation can ill afford to abandon the certain fast breeder technology for uncertain technologies that may or may not be realized.

If the U.S. indeed wants to be a strong political and moral force on the world scene and on the issues of plutonium, we should lead in fast breeder developments. Countries, like people, respect responsible leadership. If we do not accept the leadership in developing fast breeder reactors then countries urgently needing energy will look to the U.S.S.R., France, Germany and Japan for direction. I, for one, have more confidence in the U.S. moral leadership on plutonium issues than some of the other countries that are already ahead of us in this field.

erything is certain this time identity of Jimmy Carter's ident, and how Walter nd the other television stars to keep the country from eep. All predictions are that ation is going to be the in New York since Mayor ist budget, but there are olations.

u look back at those 1972 conventions in Miami gave us Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew versus George McGovern and Tom Eagleton, you have to think that maybe the popularity polls are giving President Ford and Governors Carter and Reagan a bum rap.

George Gallup, in his latest exploration of the American mind, tells us that popular enthusiasm for these three leading candidates this year is not unbounded, which is scarcely front-page news. But he adds the surprising fact that they fall far below the "highly favorable" ratings given most of the other Presidential candidates at roughly comparable times in the Presidential elections of the last quarter century.

'The main thing about Ford and Carter is that they seem plain and decent and know... the American character.'

For example, Carter gets 25 percent on the "highly favorable" index as compared to 22 percent for Ford and Reagan, whereas Nixon got 40 percent and McGovern 23 percent in August of 1972. Nixon got 28 percent to Hubert Humphrey's 27 percent in May of 1968, and Lyndon Johnson polled 59 percent to Barry Goldwater's 15 percent in May of 1964.

It's almost enough to strain belief in polling if not in democracy, for with the benefit of hindsight, you have to wonder whether Ford and Carter don't deserve a much higher rating. I speak not of Reagan out of respect for the laws of libel.

Mr. Carter has conquered the Democratic Party the way Lindbergh conquered the Atlantic and John Glenn led the American way into outer space. On this same basis—unknown boy conquers the unknown—the Democrats if they are wise, after the tall ships Bicentennial regatta and Queen Elizabeth, would be giving Jimmy a ticker-tape parade on Monday instead of a convention.

He has, after all, brought the South back into the Democratic Party, and vice versa. He has challenged the old men and assumptions of both parties. He has revived discussion about the original moral values of the nation, and has even challenged the secular prejudice that religious faith is "an illogical belief in the occurrence of the improbable," followed by people who have "lost or never had the capacity for a clear and realistic thought."

It could be, of course, that the agnostic world of the big American cities, which have more electoral votes than the Bible belt of the South and the Middle West, will destroy Carter in November. He has yet to prove that he can touch and hold the yearnings of the nation as a whole, and in some ways he could be highly vulnerable to ridicule; but at least he is both something new and something very old in American politics, and offers us some relief from the days of Johnson and Nixon.

Much of the same can be said about the character, but not about the experience, of Gerald Ford. He was chosen for his limited qualities by Mr. Nixon, who misjudged and underestimated him, as he did so many others.

Nevertheless, the nation is much in the President's debt. He thinks progress is made primarily by stopping bad things rather than by doing good things; but right or wrong, what he says in private is what he says in public. This is a big change in a capital almost lost in skepticism and cynicism since the early sixties.

One would have thought that more than a quarter of George Gallup's voters might have given them a "highly favorable" rating on the basis of their records in the last couple of years, but of course Gallup is really measuring "charisma," which like "détente" is a funny word nobody in America quite seems to understand.

The main thing about Ford and Carter is that they seem plain and decent, and know something about the best qualities and yearnings of the American character. Maybe they'll fool us later on, like so many of their predecessors, but comparatively, they are scarcely as undistinguished as the pollsters report.

Sure, the Democratic convention is going to be a dozer, and whenever the Democrats unite on anything, it's not a bad idea to avoid being Carterized; but if the convention gets too dull, you can always abandon Mr. Cronkite for a while and tune in the all-star baseball game on Tuesday in Philadelphia.

A Cheer, of Sorts, For the Queen

By Alexander Cockburn

BOURNE, Mass.—It's not that Queen Elizabeth II has brought republicanism into disrepute, but over the years she has certainly taken the spice out of anti-monarchism.

Back in the 50's, when I went to school in Scotland, abolition of the monarchy and confiscation of the royal estates and treasure were regarded as the sine qua non of social progress by leftist-minded fellows. Indeed, it was regarded as unlikely that such progress could otherwise be achieved.

This was, of course, the time of ultra-royalist frenzy, in the wake of the Coronation. Malcolm Muggeridge was blacklisted by the B.B.C., his house painted with horse dung for daring to attack her. Lord Altrincham, a peer given to mildly anti-Queen statements, was slapped in the face in public. Amid such outbursts we sat at history lessons ("Was King John a bad king?") enthusiastically studying the trial of Charles I, and applauding the fates of Louis XVI and Czar Nicholas II.

Almost the only Kings I ever took a fancy to were Ludwig II of Bavaria, whose eccentricities have permanent appeal, and August of Saxony. Informed by his Minister of Interior in 1918 that the people were dancing about in the main square of Dresden singing "The Internationale," August merely said mildly, "Are they allowed to do that?"

Now it still remains true that when the Red revolution comes and the means of production, distribution and exchange are entirely taken over from the Sheik of Abu Dhabi and the International Monetary Fund, the Queen and her relatives should properly be sequestered in one of the smaller of her estates, perhaps north of the border. In the meantime, it has, to be sadly admitted that the Queen has handled matters, in a period of national decline, with some adroitness.

The secret of her success has really come from not getting ideas above her station. Take the matter of fashion. She is often berated for wearing dull clothes. She does wear dull clothes. But then, how foolish she would be to prance about in haute couture. Her taste might well prove faulty; ugly questions about designers' bills would be raised in the House of Commons and no doubt a French consultant detected in Buckingham Palace and evicted amid outbursts of chauvinist passion.

Then again she has not attempted to make the royal hearth a haven for intellect and the arts, in the manner of Prince Albert. Not for her some Camelot-on-Thames or adventurous masques and other costly revelry. Nor, on the other hand, has she exhibited brutish philistinism, except in her selection of the graceless corgi as the Household's symbolic pet.

She triumphs by contrast. Anti-monarchists should regret that Princess Margaret did not ascend the throne and then bring it into disrepute by espousing the odious Armstrong-Jones and later cavorting on a Caribbean island. Margaret brings to mind the willful and foolish Edward VIII or even—more pleasantly—the indefatigable Edward VII who at least had the good sense to patronize Escoffier.

Elizabeth does well, too, in contrast to her international relatives. You will not find her immediate family firing machine guns in Pamplona, like the Carlist Prince Sixte. Or, like the Dutch royal family, contaminated by religious mania or accused of bribe-taking. And, of course, she has avoided the worst mistake of all: democratization. Foolish Scandinavian monarchs pedal about their capital cities on bicycles thus thinking to be "modern," and to ingratiate themselves with the citizenry. Instead they provoke the reasonable thought that a prince on bicycle wheels is probably a prince on the skids—and—given the expense—why bother?

'Bow, bow ye lower middle classes! Bow . . . ye tradesmen, bow, ye masses.'

—W. S. Gilbert
"Patience"

It used to be argued that the Queen symbolized the British class system and that caste and privilege flourished in the shadow of the Crown. An energetically applied tax on wealth and property would lay that notion to rest.

In the meantime, unless the future Charles III starts making some of the same mistakes as certain members of the House of Stuart, the monarchy should be allowed peacefully to molder, with the reflection that if someone has to launch a ship or open a new railway station, it might as well be a person who is not running for re-election or who can blow up the world.

Alexander Cockburn, a British subject "who is Scottish/Anglo-Irish, to be technical about it," writes for The Village Voice.

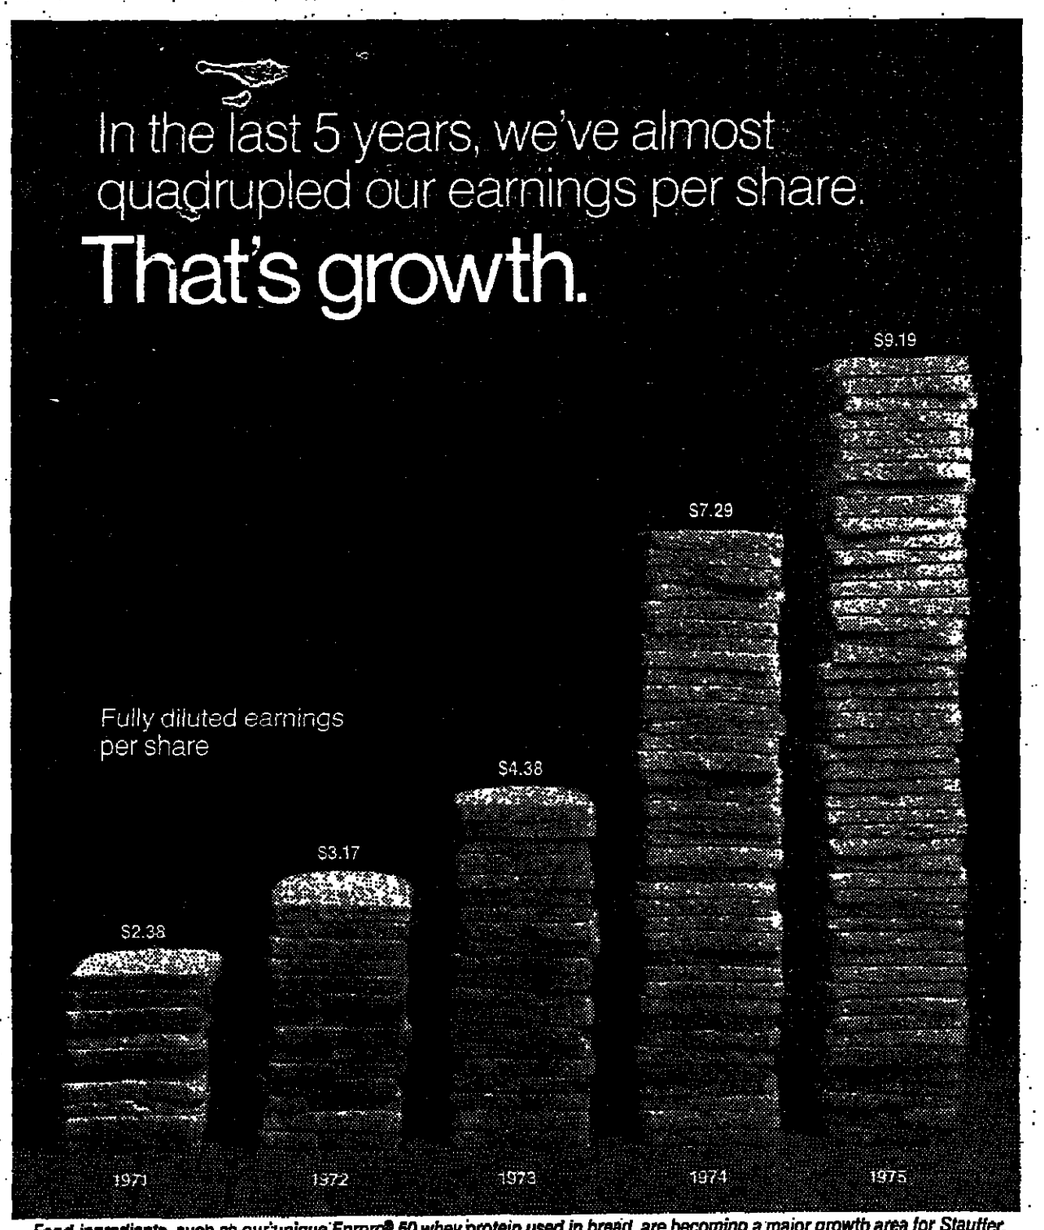
All this may seem of distant concern to Americans confident of the power and affluence of their own nation 200 years after its birth. But here in the islands where despite recent progress there still is grinding poverty and limited opportunity, with too many people crowded onto too little productive land, Caricom and its self-help effort seem vitally relevant.

On the American Independence Day, for example, handsome young St. Lucian men and women gazed in what must have been wonder and envy at a party of whites passing them in a powerful Western car on the terrifying mountain road between Castries and Soufriere. As the car moved through the remote company town of the great Cul de Sac banana plantation, where the workers have been on strike for a month, the enormous gap between affluence and subsistence-level living was unmistakable.

The truth is that the world is full of people—like many to be seen along the roads and in the towns of St. Lucia—proud and strong and hopeful people, for whom there is all too little likelihood that they will ever know more than want and frustration—perhaps anger and bitterness—far from the glitter and promise of Europe and North America.

Americans, justly proud of their own achievements and convinced of their nation's pre-eminent place in the world, may have no direct responsibility for the people of Caricom and no solutions for Caricom's problems, much less those of the third world generally. But it might be just as well for them to remember in the Bicentennial year how little of the world has anything like American wealth, or any tangible reason to rejoice in American power; and that those now poor and powerless still are the majority of us all.



Food ingredients, such as our unique Enrpro® 50 whey protein used in bread, are becoming a major growth area for Stauffer.

There's a 91-year-old chemical company with the vitality of youth. Its name is Stauffer, and its new spirit springs from steady growth and sustained earnings. The proof is in our financial results.

In the last five years earnings per share have almost quadrupled to $9.19, fully diluted. Sales have almost doubled to $950 million. Net earnings have quadrupled to $99 million. And stockholders' average return on equity has increased two and one-half times to 21.7 percent.

More than 20 percent of net after-tax earnings now come from international operations and export sales.

Just one reason for our growth is our recent diversification into specialized products and markets. An increasingly important growth area is food ingredients for many types of foods, from bread and cake to meat and cheese. Our products provide convenience and cost savings to our customers, as well as unique properties that improve food quality and allow development of new food products. Food ingredients accounted for 6 percent of our total 1975 net sales.

Food ingredients is only one of our eight basic chemical business areas. The others are industrial chemicals, 33 percent of sales; agricultural chemicals, 17 percent; international operations, 13 percent; specialty chemicals, 12 percent; plastics, 11 percent; fertilizer and mining, 6 percent, and chemical systems, 2 percent.

If you'd like to know more about our new growth pattern, send for our Annual Report. Stauffer Chemical Company, Dept. E, Westport, CT 06880.

Mrs. Nixon Seriously Ill After a Stroke

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times

LONG BEACH, Calif., July 8 — Patricia Nixon, wife of former President Richard M. Nixon, was in serious condition at the Long Beach Memorial Hospital tonight as a result of a stroke suffered yesterday.

Doctors said that she was resting comfortably, and that her condition was "stable." However, they added that it would not be apparent for 36 to 48 hours whether her condition would worsen.

She was described as having "a moderate to severe paralysis" on the left side of her body, affecting her left arm and left leg and the side of her face. She was reported to have a "slight speech impediment."

Dr. Jack M. Mosier, Long Beach neurologist, who was called in by the Nixon family physician, Dr. John C. Lungren, said that a stroke consisted of a blockage of one or more blood vessels leading to the brain.

He said that the site of the blockage had not been determined, and that there were several possible courses of remedial action. The most promising, which is being followed at the moment, is to "let Mother Nature go to work" to detour the blockage via other blood vessels, he said.

He said that Mrs. Nixon would have to be in the hospital for at least a week or 10 days, and that it was conceivable that her ailment might interfere with her walking normally.

Mrs. Nixon was admitted to the hospital today at 1:10 P.M. Pacific Daylight Time, after being taken in an ambulance from the Nixon home 30 miles away.

She was accompanied by the former President and their daughter, Julie Eisenhower.

'Very Realistic'

The preliminary examination of Mrs. Nixon by Dr. Lungren and Dr. Mosier took about two hours.

Asked what Mr. Nixon's reaction was to the diagnosis, Dr. Mosier said: "He was very nice—very realistic. He said to treat her just like any of my other patients."

Shortly after that, hospital officials said that Mr. Nixon had left the hospital, presumably to return to his residence.

Mrs. Nixon suffered the stroke while reading in a patio of their home at 4 P.M. yesterday.

Dr. Mosier said that she did not realize what was happening — which he said, was typical in such a case—and went to bed and had a restful night. It was only this morning, when she found herself partly incapacitated, that the family became fully aware of what had happened.

Dr. Mosier said that she had a history of high blood pressure, which is often conducive to strokes, and in response to a question agreed that recent family pressures might have contributed to the illness.

It was described as a "right cerebral infarct, or stroke." The doctor explained that the right side of the brain operates the left side of the body, and that the right side of the brain is involved in the perception of one's well-being.

Dr. Mosier gave his report at a news conference.

In the next few days, Mrs. Nixon will undergo tests on her skull, a brain scan and a spinal fluid examination, among other standard measures, the doctor said.

He said that she was receiving no medication, but that one possible course of treatment included administration of anticoagulants.

Anticoagulants, which Mr. Nixon received in his long siege with phlebitis in this same hos- and not something whr3.xi pital, are "potentially dangerous and not something we're going to use at this moment," Dr. Mosier said.

He said that Mrs. Nixon was "a charming patient, of good intelligence and is taking things very well.

"At this point, you can't give any reliable diagnosis. First we have to determine why she was stricken, and this takes a few days.

"Before we let her go, we want to be sure she doesn't suddenly take a turn for the worse.

"You could describe this as a stroke of 35 to 50 percent completeness. We don't know at this point if it's going to extend or become stable."

Mrs. Nixon is occupying a single room in the cardiac unit.

Dr. Mosier said that he had not treated any members of the Nixon family before.

Mr. Nixon and Mrs. Eisenhower, as far as could be determined, spoke with no one but the doctors and hospital officials during their stay of approximately two hours.

Jeffery Gerew, hospital public relations director, said he did not think there would be any further announcements on Mrs. Nixon's condition before 9:30 A.M. Friday.

There had been no previous indications that Mrs. Nixon was not in good health. On the evening of July 3, the Nixons attended a party at the home of a friend, Ken Allan, at nearby Newport Beach.

Mr. Allan, Mrs. Nixon's hairdresser, said today that they stayed at the party until 1:30 in the morning, which was later than they had originally indicated they would stay.

Julie Eisenhower and her husband, David, have been visiting the Nixons. Their other daughter, Tricia Cox, was reported to be flying here. The Nixons had been scheduled to go to a party tonight at nearby Dana Point.

The former President had been scheduled to attend his first political event since his resignation almost two years ago.

This was to be a fund-raising party on Monday for Representative Charles E. Wiggins, Republican of California, at Yorba Linda, the small San Gabriel Valley town were Mr. Nixon was born.

Mr. Wiggins was one of Mr. Nixon's chief defenders on the House Judiciary Committee, which voted impeachment charges against Mr. Nixon because of Watergate.

Ford Phones Nixon
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8— President Ford telephoned Mr. Nixon at the Long Beach hospital this afternoon to wish Mrs. Nixon a speedy recovery.

A White House spokesman said that Mr. Ford offered to be of any assistance to the former President and asked to be kept advised of Mrs. Nixon's condition.

NIXON DISBARRED BY COURT RULING

tried to resign from the New York bar, as he had done from the bars of California and the United Suate Supreme Court.

But these resignations were not accepted by the Manhattan court because he did not—as state law requires—acknowledge that he could not successfully defend himself against the charge.

Action in Brooklyn Court

In the Appellate Division in Brooklyn, another attempt by Mr. Nixon to resign was rejected yesterday because the matter had become "academic." In an affidavit filed with the court, Mr. Nixon said he could not defend himself against charges that he refused to cooperate in an investigation of the conduct of a Westchester County lawyer.

Once formal charges were brought against Mr. Nixon earlier this year by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, Mr. Nixon did not contest them.

In the past, Mr. Nixon has admitted errors in judgment in the way he handled the Watergate scandal, but he has never acknowledged guilt or responsibility.

In San Clemente, Calif., yesterday, members of Mr. Nixon's staff referred callers to Miller, Cassidy, Larroca & Lewin, the Washington law firm that represents him.

Raymond G. Larroca, a partner in the firm, said the court's proceedings "were totally unnecessary to effectuate Mr. Nixon's prior and voluntary resignation from the bar of the State of New York." He said he had no plans to appeal the court's decision "at this time."

In its opinion, the appellate court said the essental part of the charges against the former President was "obstruction of due administration of justice, a most serious offense, but one which is rendered even more grievous by the fact that in this instance the perpetrator is an attorney and was at the time of the conduct in question the holder of the highest public office of this country and in a position of public trust."

Under state law, this court has jurisdiction over lawyer disciplinary proceedings in the First Department, which consists of Manhattan and the Bronx. A lawyer is licensed to practice across the state, and any action by this court affects his ability to practice statewide.

From 1963 until he was elected President in 1968, Mr. Nixon was a partner in the Wall Street law firm of Mudge, Stern, Baldwin & Todd, which later became Nixon, Mudge, Rose, Guthrie, Alexander & Mitchell.

"We note that while Mr. Nixon was holding public office he was not acting in his capacity as an attorney," the court said. "However, the power of the court to discipline an attorney extends to misconduct other than professional malfeasance when such conduct reflects adversely upon the legal profession and is not in accordance with the high standards imposed upon members of the bar."

The opinion was written by Justices Arthur Markewich, Vincent A. Lupiano, Harold Birns and Myles J. Lane.

Dissenting was Justice Theodore R. Kupferman, who said Mr. Nixon's resignation should have been accepted under the circumstances.

Inquiry Begun in 1974

An investigation into Mr. Nixon's conduct began in September 1974, a month after he resigned as President, by the Committee on Grievances of the bar association. That group has been designated by the Appellate Division in Manhattan to institute disciplinary proceedings in its jurisdiction.

John G. Bonomi, chief counsel of the grievance committee, handled the case along with three special counsel—Arthur L. Liman, Lewis A. Kaplan and Ronald W. Meister, all of the law firm of Paul, Weiss, Rifkin, Wharton & Garrison.

These lawyers drafted the following charges that were sustained by the court yesterday:

¶Mr. Nixon improperly obstructed an investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation into the unlawful entry into the headquarters of the Democratic National Committee in Washington on June 17, 1972.

¶He improperly approved the surreptitious payment of money to E. Howard Hunt, who was indicted in connection with the break-in.

¶He improperly concealed and encouraged others to conceal evidence relating to unlawful activities of members of his staff and the Committee to Re-Elect the President.

¶He improperly engaged in conduct that interfered with the legal defense of Mr. Ellsberg, who was on trial in Los Angeles on charges arising from the publication of the Pentagon Papers in 1971.

¶He improperly attempted to obstruct an investigation by the Justice Department into the unlawful entry into the offices of Dr. Lewis Fielding, a Beverly Hills, Calif., psychiatrist who had treated Mr. Ellsberg.

Under the court's order, Mr. Nixon's name will be struck from the roll of lawyers in the state one month from today. Once disbarred, a lawyer cannot practice law in any form, cannot appear as a lawyer before any court or agency and cannot give legal advice in the state.

Jeweler and Wife Bound And Robbed in Sea Gate

An elderly jeweler and his wife were tied up yesterday by three masked burglars armed with a knife and handgun after they were awakened in their two-story residence at 3817 Poplar Avenue in the Sea Gate section of Brooklyn, where a private police force is maintained.

The victims, Herman Cohen, 60 years old, and his wife, Claire, were robbed of about $10,000 worth of jewelry, some of which was on consignment, and $1,200 in cash.

After the thieves fled, the couple freed themselves and called the police.

The purpose of these hearings is to discuss the annual State strategy for administration of the water pollution control program for federal fiscal year commencing October 1, 1976, and ending September 30, 1977; and amendments to the State's Continuing Planning Process.

The water pollution control program will contain a statewide assessment of water quality problems and the causes of these problems, and a listing of the priorities for construction grants for municipal sewage treatment works and other appropriate program actions.

Copies of the proposed State strategy and the Municipal Project Priority List will be available about July 15, 1976, for examination at the Headquarters and nine Regional Offices of the Department of Environmental Conservation at locations listed herein below.

An opportunity to be heard will be given to all persons, municipalities, organizations, corporations, or agencies of the State. The hearing at each location will continue until all persons present who wish to be heard have been heard. Written statements are encouraged and such written statements received prior to or at the hearings and oral statements presented at the hearings will be considered part of the official record. The record of the hearings will remain open until August 15, 1976, for additional statements which may be sent to the Department of Environmental Conservation, Division of Pure Waters, 50 Wolf Road, Albany, New York 12233.

A Family's Campaign Is Parallel to Carter's

By ROY REED
Special to The New York Times

ROGERS, Ark., July 8—If Jimmy Carter thinks he has gone to a lot of trouble getting to New York this year, he should talk to the Eugene T. Kelley family.

Gene and Joy Kelley, a husband-and-wife political team, have been working to go to the 1976 Democratic National Convention almost as long and hard as Mr. Carter has. They finally nailed down Mr. Kelley's position as a Carter delegate less than a month ago, about the time Mr. Carter sewed up the Presidential nomination.

This is the first of several articles dealing with one delegate to the Democratic National Convention and his family.

Immediately after that, the two oldest of the five Kelley children, both of whom inherited an instinct for political initiative, began lobbying to go to New York with their parents. They won last week with an artful foot-in-the-door strategem.

Now, after an endless series of letters, telephone calls, visits and assaults on problems, the four oldest Kelleys are ready to leave for the Big Apple—provided the calves don't get out.

Like most small-town Southerners, the Kelleys do not go to New York often. They are excited.

They have not said a word so far about the city's crime, prostitutes or dirty streets.

Big Plans for Visit

They have talked instead about their forthcoming first stay at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, where they and the rest of the Arkansas delegation will be housed; about the prospect of getting tickets for a good play; about visiting the museums, and especially about getting Mrs. Kelley and the children into Madison Square Garden to watch the highlights of the convention.

Convention passes and theater tickets are the largest remaining problems. Gov. David Pryor, the head of the Arkansas delegation, has assured Mrs. Kelley and the children that he will help them see part of the convention.

Getting into a theater may be tougher.

"We'd like to see a good Broadway play," Mrs. Kelley, the even-tempered realist a mother of five must be, said the other night, "but do you

Emilio Carranza after his 1928 flight from Mexico City to Washington, which included a forced stop in South Carolina

In Pine Barrens, a Salute to a Fallen Eagle

By FRED FERRETTI
Special to The New York Times

TABERNACLE, N. J.—In a remote clearing cut into the stunted underbrush seven miles southeast of this tiny Pine Barrens hamlet, the 48th anniversary of the death of Emilio Carranza will be observed tomorrow by Mexico's diplomatic corps and the American Legion in nearby Mount Holly.

In the white, hot sands devoid of grass stand two tall sentinel pines and a pair of white-painted flagpoles flanking a 10-foot-high tapered concrete shaft, which marks the spot where Capt. Emilio Carranza, a Mexican flier, crashed on July 13, 1928, as he was attempting to fly nonstop from New York to Mexico City in duplication of a similar good-will flight by Charles A. Lindbergh a year earlier.

Messinger of Peace

Carved into one side of the monument is an arrow pointing skyward, on the other a falling eagle. And there are these words:

Mensajero De Paz
El Pueblo Mexicano
Anhela Fructifiquen
Tus Altos Ideales
Homenaje De La Ninez
Mexicana

On the reverse is the translation: "Messenger of Peace, the People of Mexico Hope That Your High Ideals Will Be Realized. Homage of the Children of Mexico."

On the flagpoles tomorrow afternoon the United States and Mexican flags will be raised, a band will play, Captain Carranza will be saluted and flowers will be placed at the base of the modest monument—which was created by an artist who signed himself M. Cinturion, and paid for with money collected from Mexican schoolchildren.

Each year since 1929, Captain Carranza's death has been observed on the site where his monoplane—the "Mexico-Excelsior" an exact duplicate of Lindbergh's "Spirit of St. Louis"—crashed to earth after it was struck by lightning during a violent storm a bare hour after he had taken off for Mexico City from Roosevelt Field on Long Island.

It was from Roosevelt Field that Lindbergh flew across the Atlantic.

Friendship Flight

The same year of that flight, 1927, he flew to Mexico City to demonstrate the friendship between the two countries. And Captain Carranza, who was 23 years old, wanted to duplicate that. He flew with the diplomatic sanctions of President Calvin Coolidge and President Plutarco Elias Calles, from Mexico City to Washington, with a forced stop in South Carolina because of poor weather and mechanical trouble.

He nevertheless went to Washington as his country's good-will emissary. In New York he was given a hero's parade, welcomed officially by the city and likened generally to Lindbergh. His flight from Roosevelt Field to Mexico City was originally scheduled for July 10. It was put off for two days because of stormy weather conditions. But he was impatient.

On the evening of July 13, although the storms persisted, he drove out to Roosevelt Field and took off—between storm fronts—at about 8 P.M.

An hour later, people in a group of houses that was called Chatsworth in 1928 heard the plane overhead. Then they heard thunder, saw lightning and torrents of rain.

The next day Captain Carranza was found in what was left of his plane, his hand clutching a flashlight, a torn map nearby. It was surmised that he had lost his way and was seeking a place to put down when he was hit by the storm.

The news of his death was greeted with sadness in the United States and Mexico. His coffin lay in state in New York, and the United States offered the battleship Florida as a funeral ship to take him home to Mexico.

Instead, his body went by train and poems were written of him, songs were sung and cities officially mourned him as the funeral train went south. He was returned to Mexico on July 24 and buried as a general the next day.

Shortly after it was decided that a marker be placed where he had died, and the Carranza Memorial was created in the Pine Barrens.

The memorial is maintained by the state's Bureau of Parks and by Mount Holly Post 11 of the American Legion. It is off the tourist path and is visited rarely, but because of the starkness of its setting, is is impressive when it is visited.

'An Unbelievable Thing'

Each year, the Mexican Government and the American Legion have a ceremony of memorial. "It is important that we do it each year," said José Luis Enciso, a consul at the Mexican Consulate in New York City. "It was an unbelievable thing for the captain to do. But it was a trip of good-will. It is important for people to look and learn. And so year by year we do it."

Mr. Enciso will carry with him the greetings of Jaime Pena Vera, the consul general of Mexico, and from Washington Mexican military attaches will bring greetings from Mexican Ambassador José de Olloqui.

Tomorrow's celebration will be slightly more significant because it is this country's Bicentennial year, according to a letter to Consul General Pena Vera from Murrell N. Wolman, chairman of the observance. It will be, he wrote, "the greatest we have ever conducted."

And perhaps tonight some from this town, or from nearby communities such as Indian Mills, High Crossing and Huckleberry Hill, will dare a bit of the dire folklore that has grown up around the Carranza monument.

It is said that anyone who spends a whole night there, at about the time of the annual observance, will receive a mysterious $2,000. The person can "take any kind of gun you want," according to a man who has lived in Tabernacle his whole life. "But nobody's ever stayed the night."

Mahmoud Riad, the head of the Arab League's mediation effort in Lebanon, returned to Cairo yesterday from a fruitless talk and said the Arab peacekeeping force in the Beirut area was powerless to act. He and the two other members of the mission, the foreign ministers of Tunisia and Bahrain, will attend a meeting of the 20 Arab League countries on Monday to consider further steps in the mediation attempt. In Beirut it was believed that the situation was too heated and bitter for effective mediation now, and the pessimism was increased by a report from Yasir Arafat, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, that Syrian troops were about to attack Beirut. More than 9,000 people died in the earthquake and subsequent landslides on the Indonesian part of the island of New Guinea on June 26, The Indonesian Government's official estimate of the number of people killed is 9,011, and it may increase. The Social Welfare Minister said 15,000 survivors were waiting to be taken out of the earthquake area. [A1:1.]

With more support from uncommitted delegates, President Ford's prospects of winning the Republican Presidential nomination have improved substantially. He has received in recent days expressions of qualified support from 22 delegates who told The New York Times in a second canvass of uncommitted delegates that they were strongly inclined to vote for Mr. Ford on the first ballot in Kansas City next month. The President also won 12 of the 18 North Dakota delegates chosen yesterday at the Republican State Convention in Fargo. Ronald Reagan won four, leaving two others uncommitted. [A1:5.]

Suggestions that Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota was too liberal to run for Vice President on the Carter ticket were dismissed as unfounded by Jimmy Carter, who has been meeting with possible Vice Presidential candidates at his home in Plains, Ga. Senator Mondale had a discussion that lasted for several hours with Mr. Carter, who afterward began talks with Senator John Glenn of Ohio. [A1:2-4.]

A growing number of past and present executives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, including two aides close to its director, Clarence M. Kelley, have come under the scrutiny of the Justice Department's inquiry into the bureau, sources close to the inquiry said. [A1:6-7.]

Former President Richard M. Nixon was disbarred by the Appellate Division of the New York State Supreme Court, which in a 4-to-1 opinion sustained five charges, all related to Watergate, that he obstructed "the due administration of justice" and thus had violated the Code of Professional Responsibility. The charges were brought by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York. [A1:3-4.]

An 800-foot glass fiber cable, as fine as a human hair, that carries pulses of light from a fixed source, replaced the standard three-quarter-inch copper coaxial cable in the transmission equipment of a commercial cable television concern. Engineers said it was the biggest advance in electronics since the introduction of the transistor in the early 1950's. The fiber was not expected to be ready for wide use in television until the end of the century. [A1:3-5.]

After more than a decade of intense resistance by the Legislature, New Jersey last night became the 43d state to adopt an income tax. The Senate, by a vote of 22 to 18, approved the income tax bill passed late Wednesday night by the Assembly. Governor Byrne signed the bill into law and said he would ask the State Supreme Court to lift the injunction on educational funds that closed the state's public schools in a school-financing dispute. [A1:8.]

Expecting that the voluntary hospital employees' strike will be extended to nursing homes today, 1,600 nursing home patients are being moved to other places. Ten municipal hospitals are also expected to be struck. The 30,000 employees of 33 voluntary hospitals who are on strike are mostly nonprofessionals, but their union does have registered nurses as members. Among them are nurses at St. Barnabas Hospital in the Bronx, where 100 nurses walked out. The Health Department assigned 30 of its public health nurses and 25 paraprofessionals to take their place. Jersey Income Tax Plan Will Yield School Money

Package Voted by Legislature Designed to Reopen System, Cut Property Levies and Provide Windfall for New York

By JOSEPH F. SULLIVAN
Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, July 8—The income tax package passed by the Legislature is designed to generate enough revenue to reopen the state's public schools, provide each homeowner with a $190 reduction in his local property tax bill and even give New York a $22 million annual windfall.

The package, which had passed the Assembly, was approved tonight by the Senate by a 22-to-18 vote.

The graduated 2 to 2.5 percent income tax package, aimed at bringing in $775 million, will also repeal a number of present taxes, including the transportation taxes levied on New York and Pennsylvania residents working in New Jersey.

Since both of these taxes were modeled on income tax levies in the two states, they captured all of the income taxes the two states would normally expect to collect from their own residents who work in New Jersey.

These commuters will be subject to the new New ersey income tax, but since it is lower than the effective income taxes in New York and Pennsylvania, these states would be able to collect taxes from their commuting wage-earners for the first time in years.

For example, a New Yorker earning $19,000 in New Jersey will owe $1,280 in income taxes under both the New York income tax and the New Jersey commuter tax. The tax revenue would go to New Jersey, with the taxpayer getting a full write-off on his New York tax form.

Under the New Jersey income tax the same taxpayer will owe New Jersey only $380 and, with this as a write-off, would still owe New York $900.

The Pennsylvania tax is set at 2 percent of gross income, but it allows fewer deductions and therefore has a slightly higher yield. As a result, Pennsylvania will realize approximately $3 million in revenue when the commuter tax on its residents is replaced with the state income tax, according to Sidney Glaser, New Jersey tax director.

New Jersey realized approximately $50 million a year from the taxes on residents of the two states and will lose at least half of that amount when the commuter taxes were replaced by the income tax.

Other Tax Repeals

The package will repeal the tax on unearned income ($55 million a year) immediately, and the unincorporated business tax ($20 million) and the retail gross receipts tax ($10 million) in the 1978 fiscal year.

It will also repeal the 5 percent sales tax on business machines and equipment ($35 million) in the 1979 fiscal year.

Schools

The package will provide $374 million for increased state school aid the first year, $485 million in the second year, and more than $570 million in the third year, based on projected increased revenue yields.

The money will provide funds for the "thorough and efficient" school law enacted last year to cure constitutional imperfections in the present system of school financing.

Local Tax Relief

The package will appropriate $260 million in aid to municipalities in the form of a "homestead rebate" that sponsors of the legislation say will reduce local property taxes an average of $190 per residence.

Elderly people who own homes will receive rebates that would average $240.

In addition, municipalities will receive another $50 million in "revenue sharing" that would average out to $7 for each resident and further ease local tax pressures.

The package will also provide another $36 million to pick up the local matching share of the cost of providing the elderly with the present $160 reduction in their property tax bill and veterans with their $50 property tax reduction. This again will reduce budget pressures at the local level. The package also contains $8 million to extend the $160 property tax break to handicapped homeowners and their surviving spouses.

Tenants will share in the tax break given their landlords by proportionate reductions in their rents. One estimate said this will average $65 a tenant, with the elderly getting approximately $100.

The Income Tax

The tax will be assessed at the rate of 2 percent on adjusted gross income up to $20,000 and 2.5 percent on income above that figure.

Taxpayers will be able to deduct $1,000 for each member of their household and an additional $1,000 for the elderly, disabled persons or children in private schools or college. Medical expenses of more than 2 percent of gross income also can be deducted.

New Jersey residents who work in New York will receive a New York income tax credit against their New Jersey tax debt. If they earn virtually all their money in New York, they will pay no tax to New Jersey.

If, however, they earn a substantial portion of their income in New Jersey, they will have to pay some tax even though their New Yok tax is higher and will cancel the New Jersey tax on a dollar-for-dollar write-off basis.

The tax will begin July 1 but payroll deductions would not start until September. The deductions for the first half of the year will be at a higher rate than will be collected beginning in January, since the state must collect the first six months of the tax in a four-month period.

Other Features

The package also includes a bill that will establish a state tax convention next year to study New Jersey's entire tax structure and recommend changes. The 80 delegates to the convention will be elected from the state's 40 legislative districts.

Another bill in the package contains a two-year "self destruct" feature, meaning the income tax will die in 1978 unless re-enacted by the Legislature at that time.

One state legislative leader said tonight, however, that it would be "naive" to believe the Legislature could allow a tax that would be generating $900 million by that time to "simply lapse."

Suit Against Subway Noise Rejected

The New York State Court of Appeals yesterday rejected a suit challenging the noise level of New York City's subways, ruling that the city's failure to adopt standards required by a four-year-old antinoise code stopped short of illegality. A majority memorandum in the 5-to-1 decision by the state's highest court said that despite the city's failure to comply with its own code, "there are no specific illegal acts or omissions for which judicial correction may be sought." The suit was filed by Borough President Robert Abrams of the Bronx, State Senator Carol Bellamy, Democrat-Liberal of Brooklyn; City Councilman Theodore S. Weiss, Democrat of Manhattan and two citizens groups.

Gag Order Ruling Rejected

Pending a hearing by the Appellate Division of Superior Court, July 19, the State Supreme Court turned down a request to lift a gag order that restricts defense and prosecution attorneys from commenting publicly on the Rubin (Hurricane) Carter case. The court ruled 6 to 1 that there was "no sufficient reason" to stay the gag order, which has been in effect since March 26. Mr. Carter, a former middleweight boxer, is to be tried later this year on triple murder charges. He was convicted of the crimes in 1967 but was released from prison last March after being granted a new trial. The Supreme Court ruled then that Mr. Carter and John Artis, a co-defendant, deserved a new trial because the prosecution in the 1967 case withheld evidence that could have helped the defense.

Yonkers Fiscal Outlook Called Good

The financially troubled City of Yonkers has "turned around" and can look forward to a deficit-free future, according to John Feeney, deputy state comptroller. After a meeting with the Yonkers Emergency Financial Control Board, he said that "the city is living within the financial plan that will bring it to [a point of] no deficit on June 30, 1977."

Goldin Rejects Library Payment

Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin said that his office would refuse to pay employees of the Bloomingdale branch library on West 100th Street for the period the branch was closed on Wednesday because of the hot weather. Mr. Goldin's assertion that the employees had "taken it upon themselves to evict the public and declare for themselves a holiday" was challenged by a spokesman for the New York Public Library, who said the closing had been ordered by Walter Roziewski, coordinator for Manhattan branches, in accordance with the library's union contract.

From the Police Blotter:

Junior High School 227 at 6500 16th Avenue in the Borough Park section of Brooklyn was vandalized by burglars. Paul Safina, the custodian, put the cost of damage and thefts in the three-story building at $10,000. ... ¶Alexander Turner, 24 years old, of 111 Nostrand Avenue, Brooklyn, was stabbed to death in a fight that followed an insult to his wife. The suspect, William Reese, 25, of 100 Broadway in the Williamsburg section, near the scene of the slaying, surrendered hours later to the police.

City Council Ethics Committee Weighs Action on Troy Today

By GLENN FOWLER

The New York Council's Committee on Standards and Ethics will hold a closed meeting today to consider whether any action should be taken concerning the Finance Committee chairman, Matthew J. Troy Jr., who pleaded guilty a week ago to Federal charges of income-tax evasion.

Arthur J. Katzman, who like Mr. Troy is a Queens Democrat but unlike him is a member of the party's liberal wing, is chairman of the Committee on Standards and Ethics. Other members are Thomas J. Cuite, leader; Edward L. Sadowsky, Michael De Marco, and Samuel D. Wright, all Democrats, and Angelo J. Arculeo, the minority leader. While the Committee is empowered to recommend that a Councilman be removed from a committee chairmanship, the actual remuval is carried out by the Council's Committee on Rules, Privileges and the Election.

Mr. Katzman and Mr. Troy had been bitter political rivals. When Mr. Troy was leader of the Queens Democratic Party, a post he lost two years ago as a result of Mayor Beame's efforts, he attempted to purge Mr. Katzman by denying him the Democratic designation on the ballot for Councilman. Mr. Katzman ran as an independent and won. In another development, District Attorney Nicholas Ferraro of Queens yesterday began studying material he had obtained from United States Attorney David G. Trager in connection with an admission by Mr. Troy that he evaded payment of Federal income taxes in 1972. On the basis of the material and other information he has obtained, Mr. Ferraro will have to decide whether to present the case against the Councilman to a grand jury.

Mr. Ferraro declined to discuss the information he had received from Mr. Trager.

Starr Resigning as C... Of New York City Ho...

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

Roger Starr, New York City's controversial Housing and Development Administrator, will leave his post by early September to assume an urban affairs professorship at New York University, Mayor Beame announced yesterday. No successor was named immediately.

Meanwhile, it was learned that John G. Heimann, New York State's Superintendent of Banks, has been asked by top officials of the Carey administration to consider switching to the post of State Housing Commissioner.

That position is being vacated today by Lee Goodwin, who said on Wednesday that she was quiting as the state's top housing official because of her disagreement with Governor Carey's handling of the bitter tenant strike at the huge Co-op City apartment project in the Bronx.

Mr. Heimann, who has an extensive background in housing finance, declined to comment on the matter when reached yesterday in Albany. But other persons familiar with the search for a successor to Mrs. Goodwin said Mr. Heimann had been asked to consider the housing post, which pays about the same as his $47,800-a-year banking-agency job.

Urban-Affairs Expert

Whether anybody else might also have been approached to succeed to Mrs. Goodwin would be named. She quit because of her dissatisfaction with a compromise plan, agreed to by the Governor, to end the 13-month dispute in which most residents of the state-financed Co-op City have been resisting a 25 percent increase in their monthly maintenance charges.

Mr. Starr's planned resignation, although not officially announced until yesterday, was first reported in May. Although his outspoken views on various issues had made him a target of much criticism, sources in the Beame administration said there was no feeling that the 58-year-old official was being pressured to leave the city's top housing post.

In a "Dear Roger" letter made public yesterday, Mayor Beame said he was accepting Mr. Starr's resignation with a "sense of deep personal loss." The Mayor praised Mr. Starr's "skill and dedication" in a "difficult assignment during a time of crisis."

This was a reference to the fact that the city's fiscal crisis had caused the abandonment of

Byrne Signs a State Income Tax Voted in Trenton

by Assemblyman Albert Burstein of Tenafly and the Senate President, Matthew Feldman of Teaneck.

"Governors have been waiting a long time for this," the Governor added. "The bill will open the schools, hopefully tomorrow."

Mr. Byrne said that he had sent a letter to Chief Justice Richard J. Hughes of the State Supreme Court informing him that he had signed the bill that provides sufficient money to finance the educational law.

More than 100,000 students and 4,000 teachers in summer school porgrams have been affected by the closing.

The debate in the Senate on the tax measure lasted only an hour and 45 minutes, a far cry from the years and months of arguments and discussions in the past.

There was a general air of finality in the State House as legislators reported for party caucuses, which began after 4 P.M. Republicans who opposed the tax seemed resigned to the fact that it would finally pass after almost a dozen attempts.

Senator Feldman arrived shortly before 5 P.M. and told reporters that he had "21, maybe 22 votes" for the tax. The final tally bore out his prediction.

As debate on the measure began, Senator Feldman warned the spectators crowded into the gallery that he would tolerate no outbursts or applause. The gallery was crowded with opponents of the income tax as well as parents and children who had been locked out of the schools.

The Senate Democratic leader, Joseph T. Merlino of Trenton, asked for concurrence in the Assembly amendments to the tax measure, which has shifted back and forth between the houses for the last five months.

He said that concurrence in the amendments—calling for a 2 percent tax on income up to $20,000 and a 2.5 percent levy on income above that figure—"will reopen the schools."

"This issue will be behind us and we can turn our attention to other important matters," Mr. Merlino added.

The Legislature has been stymied since the beginning of the session by the income tax, which has precluded action on a host of programs that some legislators feel are vital to the state.

Republicans argued that the tax measure was not true tax reform but was merely adding an additional tax burden on the taxpayers.

They argued that calling the measure tax reform and saying that it offered real property tax relief was "a hoax and a fraud." Senator Alfred N. Beadleston, Republican of Rumson, said that a provision of the tax bill granting parents of children in non-public schools an additional $1,000 deduction "would be struck down by the courts."

"Let's ont fool the public," he said.

Senator Anthony Imperiale, indpendent of Newark, said that the tax was "a Christmas presnt with a time bomb in it." He said that it would haunt the Legislature in future years, and added that the State Supreme Court had acted illegally in closing the schools.

"This is not a proud day," he said. "It's not going to be a victorious day. What we're doing here today is a fraud. That's all these bills are—nothing but a fraud, a disgrace."

Senator John F. Russo, Democrat of Toms River, who cast the 22d vote for the bill, said: "I don't like this plan. I don't think it's a good plan. t isn't true tax reform."

But he added that children were out of school and "the kids need our help to get back."

Democrats argued that passage of the income tax measure was needed to provide the $374 million needed to fully finance the Education Act of 1975, to give property tax relief to homeowners across the state and to insure that the schools would be reopened.

The tax is effective as of July 1, 1976, and payroll deductions will begin some time in September.

The tax measure was approved in the Assembly late yesterday—and its adoption by the Senate today ends almost a decade of opposition to an income tax in both Houses. The measure calls for the imposition of a 2 percent tax on incomes up to $20,000 and 2.5 percent on incomes above that amount.

The two districts would be transferred to the co-op by the city by means of exclusive, long-term franchise, with workers "buying into the plan" by means of loans paid off by their own labor, Mr. Zuccotti said. The value of the real estate and equipment handed over by the city would be assessed and ownership transferred by means of a five-year city loan.

The two sanitation districts—the 32d in Brooklyn and the 55th in Queens—have been proposed because they are considered among the more efficient in the city's 58 districts. Mr. Zuccotti said that a final decision on the two districts had not been made and that the union's views on this and other points would be important. Jack Bigel, a labor consultant who is the sanitation union's chief expert on the subject, was not available for comment yesterday.

According to a memorandum to the Mayor's office from Mr. Schrank, a three-part, 12-month transition program is recommended, beginning with productivity raises for workers. The second phase, requiring state legislation, would combine the two districts as a public-benefit corporation working under contract with the city, with workers remaining in the city pension system. The final phase would be a private workers' cooperative to take over the public benefit contract.

The main problem, according to the report, is that even state legislation could not permit private co-op workers to remain in the city pension system. Therefore, workers would have to set up their own pension system

Efficiency Is Stressed

The report notes that the co-op can only be profit-making and profit-sharing when it becomes more efficient in the sanitation operation than the city. "Profits may not be immediate nor will there be any instant payoffs to co-op members," it asserts.

The co-op would be encouraged to move into such "sideline" ventures as trash-recycling to realize extra profits, the draft proposal continues.

Under the plan, each worker would own an equal share of the business, entitling him or her "to a job, some control over how that job is worked, a part-ownership of a city frachise, equipment owned by the co-op and any real estate owned by the co-op, such as garage and office facilities."

The closing of the Crossroads Bookstore was also a media event as about 20 reporters, television camera men and still photographers accompanied the eight police officers who closed the pornography store in Times Square.

Times Square Raid Shuts Large Pornography Shop

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON

The Crossroads Bookstore, a large hard-core pornography operation in Times Square, was closed yesterday after city officials served the operators with an eviction order.

The ground-floor facility on Broadway at 42d Street, now crammed with a hundred movie machines and rows of magazine racks, will be converted into a police substation.

Frederic Papert, the president of the 42d Street Redevelopment Corporation, said he hoped to have condemnation proceedings completed this week so that police units could start using the facility on Monday.

On June 24 the Board of Estimate approved the condemnation of the facility and its use as a police station.

Sidney Baumgarten, the chairman of the city's Midtown Law-Enforcement Coordinating Committee, led the raid of about eight uniformed police officers. He denied that the eviction was conducted to coincide with preparations for the Democratic National Convention, which opens Monday.

The pornography center is owned by a "series of dummy corporations," a city official said. The State Supreme Court found it to have an improper certificate of occupancy. The operators of the bookstore have been convicted seven times for promoting obscenity.

The city official said that more than 30 "similar cases are now in active litigation" and that other eviction notices could be served on pornography operations in the Times Square area at any time.

Just before the raid, the bookstore contained about a hundred men who were dropping quarters into the movie machines, looking through magazines or listening to the change makers urging them to see one film or another.

Mr. Baumgarten and the police swept through the doorway on Broadway at about 2:40 P.M., and the customers retreated en masse through a door on Seventh Avenue. No arrests were made.

Then a bit of bedlam ensued.

"No statements! No statements!" an employee cried out. A man who had been serving as a money changer threatened to kill anyone who took his picture, as the cameras clicked away, anyway.

Meanwhile, a tall man in a dark suit moved quietly to where a man with a beard sat at a cash register and said slowly: "You are being served with a court order."

The news of the raid spread quickly, and normally crowded "adult bookstores" nearby soon practically emptied.

Many of the men who usually loiter in the area also disappeared.

"I walked right by my subway stop," a professional woman who works in the area said later, "because I'm so used to finding it by wading through the clusters of men. When I didn't see them, I thought I was on the wrong street."

New $18.5 Million Deck Slated For George Washington Bridge

Workmen will start replacing the 45-year-old upper deck of the George Washington Bridge next spring in a largely nighttime operation that will have huge roadway sections swinging in and out ike giant erector-set parts.

The task is expected to take two years, but the work will be done at off-peak hours and all eight lanes of the upper level will be open for traffic during each morning and evening rush period.

Announcing an $18.5 milion contract award for the job yesterday, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey said that the novel design and approach to the work had been developed by the authority's own engineers.

The old concrete deck, under these plans, will be lifted out in sections and replaced with 11 by 60-foot steel roadway sections, each prefabricated and prepaved so that its riding surface will be available for immediate use.

The contract was awarded to the low bidder, the Karl Koch Erecting Company of Cartaret, N. J. It calls for a completely new roadway surface on the upper level with a so-called orthotropic design, which means that the structural supporting units also form the deck or road surface. The lower level has six traffic lanes, and another contract awarded yesterday — for work costing $814,200 — will provide an extra toll booth and other improvements to approach roadways to expand traffic capacity on this level. This work is scheduled for completion by Nov. 15.

... were permissible for fire victims or for medical reasons or where a refusal would harm a family's health and welfare. But such exceptions may be granted only by headquarters, and according to the social workers, headquarters was adamant in the Queens woman's case.

Herb Rosenzweig, the department's personnel administrator, acknowledged in a telephone interview yesterday that the case as described appeared to be "a reasonable exception." He promised that it would be given prompt review.

He said the department was now turning down most requests by welfare clients for moving expenses, which formerly ran to 200 cases a day.

Another department aide, who asked not to be quoted by name, recalled that the city last year stopped paying broker fees for clients who found new apartments.

"The fees did not necessarily provide better housing," she said. "We had a few complaints, at first. But now, landlords will just learn that they can't get security from us, and will take the tenants anyhow."

A Community Service aide disagreed. "The landlords who agree will be those who have less marketable housing," she said. "The result will be more segregated welfare housing."

Another social worker was delighted to learn that the Queens mother would get a hearing today, but commented: "These kinds of cases of ambiguous directives and officials who enforce them too rigidly happen all the time. The people fall through the cracks."

Trucks Use Sidewalk To Pass Parked Van

A delivery van parked dead center in narrow West 40th Street for 20 minutes yesterday afternoon provided an example of continuing traffic tieups in the garment district despite the year-old program of the city to speed vehicular movement in the area.

While United Parcel Service van No. 13767 remained in the middle of the street, the only way around it for backed-up trucks was to drive up on the sidewalk on one side of the street. Trucks were parked at the curb on the other side, leaving no room for vehicles to pass on that side.

During the interval that traffic was delayed between Broadway and Seventh Avenue, no traffic controllers or parking enforcement agents showed up. When the driver of the van returned, he was asked if his truck had broken down. "No," he said.

Jerusalem's Mayor Gives 15 Trees to Battery Park

By ISRAEL SHENKER

With just a touch of poetic license and no end of red tape, Jerusalem wood did come to Battery Park yesterday.

The customary procedure is for Americans to plant trees in Israel, but this time, in the spirit of coals-to-Newcastle, the trees were planted here.

Fifteen young Atlas cedars, designated the Jerusalem Grove, were presented by Mayor Teddy Kollek of Jerusalem on behalf of the people of his city. Mr. Kollek also gave Mayor Beame a medal struck for the occasion.

Mr. Beame then gave Mr. Kollek something he called "more useful"—a pewter vessel that looks like a begging bowl, although New York's Mayor insisted it was not what he carried around the city.

300 Attend Ceremony

About 300 invited guests sat in the park, at the southern tip of Manhattan, sweltering in sunshine worthy of Jerusalem's gold. They listened patiently to speeches and applauded the appearance of a 14-man honor guard from Israel's Navy, which marched into the sparse shade of the new trees while a three-man combo played "Buckle down, Winsocki."

Arlene Wolff, New York City's first deputy commissioner for public events, gave the audience a modest account of her campaign in favor of the grove and against the bureaucracy.

Her first move came in 1974, when she relayed to Mayor Kollek the suggestion of Sidney J. Frigand, the Mayor's press secretary, that perhaps Israel might like to send trees to America. "You've got it," Mr. Kollek said.

But where should the trees be planted? The Parks Department suggested Central Park or Riverside Park, and even Brooklyn—since trees grow there—seemed possible. A parks official insisted that Battery Park was too crowded, what with the Eisenhower Mall and the Dewey Promenade, to say nothing of the Marine Flagpole, the Wireless Operators Memorial and the Emma Lazarus Tablet.

But he was overruled in favor of a site there adjoining Castle Clinton National Monument.

The crucial question remained. Which trees? Cedars of Lebanon seemed a good choice, since they were used for the First and Second Temple. But they never knew Manhattan's rigors.

One expert suggested the oak, nettle, pine or fig that grow in Israel, but the senior plant pathologist at the New York Botanical Garden warned against them all—possible in Florida, unthinkable in Gotham.

The United States Department of Agriculture, meanwhile, insisted that imported trees required a two-year quarantine.

At that point, the lightning of inspiration struck—buy in America trees that flourish in Israel, and pay for them in Jerusalem. The choice fell on the blue Atlas cedar, the Jerusalem Foundation sent a check, and a nursery in Rhode Island shipped the trees.

In all the rhetoric of green thumbs across the sea, Rhode Island was never mentioned. In fact, the botanical boundaries were as confused as the refreshment lines at the post dedication Castle Clinton reception—food donated by the Second Avenue Delicatessen, kosher wines by Akiva, appetites to put all the rest of Manhattan in the shade.

PUBLIC NOTICE OF PROPOSED SETTLEMENT OF ADJUDICATORY HEARING
No. NPDES 75-269—Date: JULY 9, 1976

Notice is hereby given that pursuant to the authority granted by §402 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act Amendments of 1972 (the Act), the United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) issued a National Pollutant Discharge Elimination system (NPDES) permit number NY 0005479, to Pearl-Wick Corporation, 27-50 First Street, Long Island City, N.Y. 11102

This permit was issued on April 26, 1974. Subsequent to the issuance of this permit, EPA granted a request for an Adjudicatory Hearing pursuant to 40 Code of Federal Regulations, Section 125.36. Public Notice of EPA's granting of the hearing was given on January 31, 1975, Notice No. NPDES 75-86.

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that the parties to this hearing have reached a tentative settlement of the issues raised by the request for the hearing. This settlement has been embodied in a proposed stipulation. This document states the resolution of issues tentatively agreed upon and lists the modifications, if any, to the issued NPDES permit which would effectuate the proposed settlement.

Copies of the proposed stipulations and other available information may be obtained by mail from the Status of Compliance Branch, EPA, Region II, at the above address, or by calling (212) 264-8681, or in person between 8:00 A.M. and 4:30 P.M. Monday through Friday. Other forms and relevant documents may be inspected at said office. Copies will be provided at a charge of $.20 per copy sheet.

Interested persons may submit written comments on the tentative determinations to the Regional Administrator, Attention: Water Enforcement Branch, at the above address no later than AUGUST 9, 1976.

EPA will consider giving final approval to the proposed stipulations as soon as possible after the date indicated above for the submission of comments. All comments timely submitted by interested persons in response to this notice will be considered by EPA prior to the giving of final approval to the proposed stipulations.

If the stipulations are finally approved, any person who submits comments will receive copies thereof.

The wildest night spot in the Bronx is only open during the day.

It's called the World of Darkness and you'll see some exotic goings-on there. Fruit bats hanging by their toes, night monkeys swinging from the ceiling, porcupines bristling with excitement. And many more creatures who play in the dark and sleep in the light.

Admission to the Zoo from Friday through Monday is $1 for adults and 50¢ for children. It's open every day and it's easy to get there.

To reach the Zoo by car from Long Island, Westchester County, Rockland County, Connecticut or New Jersey, take Bronx River Parkway and exit at "Bronx Zoo" to the Zoo's parking field.

Convenient subway and express bus service from Manhattan, as well as bus service from Queens and in the Bronx is available. For more information, call (212) 220-5100.

Broadway

John Corry

ZOE CALDWELL will direct "An Almost Perfect Person" when Burry Fredrik brings it to Broadway in the fall. The play, a comedy by Judith Ross, is about the aftermath of a political campaign by a woman politician on the Upper West Side. She is a liberal, who has run for Congress and lost. Miss Caldwell is the distinguished actress whose last appearance here was in the "Long Day's Journey Into Night" in which Jason Robards made his debut as a director last winter at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Now Miss Caldwell will do the same with "An Almost Perfect Person."

Miss Fredrik, a co-producer of "The Royal Family," was also a co-producer of "Travesties." Miss Ross was co-author of the musical "Via Galactica" and author of "Happily Never After," which starred Barbara Barrie.

Joseph Papp has frequently been inspired in his dealings with politicians, most of whom have been at City Hall. Recently, however, Mr. Papp wrote to Jimmy Carter, and asked the Georgia Democrat for some of his thinking on the performing arts. The other day, Mr. Carter wrote back and said this:

"I have long been an enthusiast of the arts, as persons such as Robert Shaw, the conductor of the Atlanta Symphony, will attest. Moreover, I believe it important that the Federal Government help subsidize the performing arts. Arts in America are not simply a luxury; they are a vital part of the fiber of American life and deserve strong support from the Federal Government. If I am elected President, they will receive this support."

Now comes the interesting part:

"We are now in the formative stages of organizing a task force on the arts and I would be very pleased if you would not only serve on this task force, but suggest the names of others who might be interested."

Mr. Papp wrote back and said he would be delighted to serve on the task force and also to suggest the names of others. Consequently, he will meet next week with one of Mr. Carter's assistants and start thinking big.

Doug Henning returned to "The Magic Show" the other day after meditating on a Swiss alp for a couple of weeks, and he was, as always, ebullient. Mr. Henning looks rather like a cheerful, shaggy chipmunk when he does his magic onstage, and he looks much that way offstage, too. "The most important thing for a magician is that he believe in magic, and look at the world with a sense of wonder," he said on the first night of his return. Then he talked about the things that made him wonder.

"We don't know how things grow," he said. "People forget this. They forget to wonder. But a good magician will feel this wonder and transmit it to the audience. My illusions are really a metaphor for all the magic in the world."

A 12-year-old who had wandered into Mr. Henning's dressing room looked baffled.

"What do you practice?" she asked.

"The physical techniques, all the things with the body and hands, and they're very difficult. First you learn the techniques, but wonder is still at the top. The highest form of magic transmits this wonder," Mr. Henning said.

"Uh huh," the 12-year-old said.

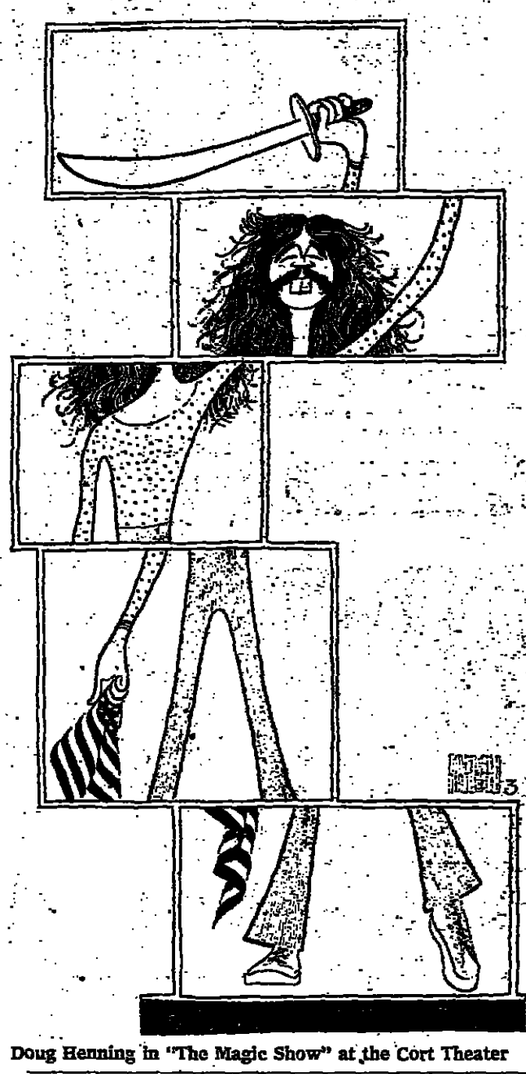
"Look at a tree. See it the first time, and it's magical. Think of it growing from an acorn. It's like looking at the world innocently," Mr. Henning said.

"How did you train yourself to be a magician?" the 12-year-old asked.

"Mental misdirection," Mr. Henning said, sounding both joyful and mysterious at the same time. He said he had read thousands of books on magic, and that he had become a professional at the age of 14. He said he had performed at the birthday party of his sister's friend in Oaksville, Ontario, and been paid $5. After that, he said, he put an ad in the paper: "Have Rabbit, Will Travel."

"I loved your show," the 12-year-old said.

"You love feeling wonder. Magic makes you question the world. It raises your consciousness. I want to weave together a show that's so fantastic that people will question their reality."



Doug Henning in "The Magic Show" at the Cort Theater

The 12-year-old looked enchanted, and asked Mr. Henning if he were planning any new illusions. He said that he would make an eight-ton elephant disappear in Los Angeles.

"I want to see that," the 12-year-old said.

"That's only the beginning," Mr. Henning said.

The Goodspeed Opera House in East Haddam, Conn., which has been giving birth to Broadway musicals regularly, will almost certainly give birth to another one soon. "Going Up," its current production, has been visited by four major theater owners, who said they liked it. There is something of a booking jam on Broadway now, with theaters for musicals in short supply, but if four theater owners say they like a musical, then it will probably find its way into one of their houses. In this case, the theater owners may be partly inspired by the lust for nostalgia that has gripped Broadway because "Going Up," whose bi is "Ev'rybody Ought to Know How to Do the Ti was first produced on Broadway by George M. 1917.

"Going Up" would join three other Goodspe tions now on Broadway—"Very Good Eddie," doah" and "Something's Afoot." When "Going Goodspeed it will be followed there by "Anni musical that has music by Charles Strouse, lyrics Charnin and a book by Thomas Meehan, and less based on the "Little Orphan Annie" comic s

"I don't know what I'd do if I didn't wo Dennis said. She was dining in an Italian res West 47th Street after coming in from Connect she lives on 20 acres with 34 cats, a dog and n books. Miss Dennis has worked more or less the last 20 years, and along the way she has Tonys and one Oscar. Now she is back on B Doris in "Same Time, Next Year." Doris is Ital friend of Miss Dennis named Brenda. Miss watched her.

"I've used what she does, some of her behi Dennis said. "It takes me at least four mont character, to feel comfortable playing it. Then I another four months, and then it takes me at le to get it back."

A waiter came up to Miss Dennis and said a cat that would soon lose its home. He said had a hard life, and he asked her to take Touched, she said she would.

"I've been criticized for being mannered," continued, "and so I keep Doris down. When able to go with the character, I keep her do sentimental, romantic. I don't have a romantic body. My God, Doris is so unfamiliar to me, an when I'm playing her I think, how can an this? But people do believe it, and sometimes cry. I'm amazed."

The New Mill at Burlington House

Textiles take a giant step backward . . . back about 200 years.

The Mill at Burlington House has been re-textiled, re-audio visualed, re-pictured and re-rigged to show you just how far our industry has come in 200 years.

It's our way of celebrating the Bicentennial—paying tribute to two centuries of innovation, growth and development in the textile industry.

It's all fashion, fun and free.

The New Mill at Burlington House takes you a giant step backward, and brings you right back up to date.

She will dance a solo in tribute to Isadora Duncan by Sir Frederick Ashton, England's greatest choreographer. Those who have seen Miss Seymour's scantily clad Isadora enter onstage while scattering rose petals, suggest that she will be the hit of the evening.

Other international teams on this program are expected to be Anthony Dowell, Britain's best classical dancer, with Miss Makarova; Marcia Haydée and Richard Cragun of the Stuttgart Ballet, and Martine van Hamel of Ballet Theater, who will be partnered by the German dancer Peter Breuer. The point to remember about this program is that it is a benefit, and available tickets are $100 and $250. For tickets, telephone 737-7035.

Prices for the company's regular programs have a $10.95 top, although some of the best seats go for $21 as "patron seats," with a $10.05 tax-deductible contribution. If you don't go directly to the State Theater box office, you can call TR 7-4727 for information. For patron seats, you must call 265-0900.

Over the weekend and later, the mixed bills of several ballets are typical of Ballet Theater's range, which extends from 19th-century classics like "La Bayadère" to Americana pieces such as Agnes de Mille's "Rodeo."

Tonight's program (8 P.M.) has "Les Sylphides"; "Medea," a vehicle for Mr. Baryshnikov with Miss Haydée; Antony Tudor's poetic dance-drama "Jardin aux Lilas" and "Rodeo." Tomorrow afternoon (2 P.M.) features "The Leaves Are Fading," Mr. Tudor's most recent work; "Les Sylphides," a pas de deux and "Rodeo." In the evening, "Shadowplay," Mr. Tudor's Zen-influenced ballet about a youth reaching manhood, is on the program with "Medea," "Jardin aux Lilas" and "Rodeo."

After Monday's gala, the highlights of the week include Mr. Baryshnikov in "Push Comes to Shove" and "La Bavadère" with the debut of the Japanese ballerina, Yoko Morishita on Tuesday night. She will be partnered by Ivan Nagy.

If you prefer singing with your dancing, then the right place is the Metropolitan Opera House, where the Soviet Union has sent some of its best folk groups in a "Russian Festival of Music and Dance." There are performances every day but Sunday. Credit cards are accepted and the box office phone is 787-3880.

Dance at an experimental level can vary in quality, but it is a fixture of the New York dance scene. A typical program by six choreographers will be presented tonight and tomorrow at 8:30 P.M. at the Cubiculo, a studio-theater in a brownstone at 414 West 51st Street.

By contrast, an established company is the Eleo Pomare Dance Company. The racially integrated company often stresses the black experience in Mr. Pomare's modern-dance works and the message usually comes across with wit and power. The company will dance Wednesday through July 17 at the Bijou Theater (7:30 P.M.) at 209 West 45th Street. For tickets, call 869-1537.

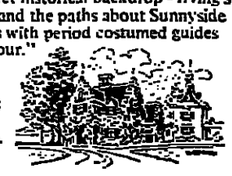
See Rip Van Winkle in summertent theater at Sunnyside, home of the author, Washington Irving.

Here's your chance to get advance reservations to a delightful evening of history and theater.

"A delightful production..." of a sprightly old play," said Mel Gussow's New York Times review. "Sunnyside is a most suitable setting" -- "the ending is joyful -- and so is the lively revival of Rip Van Winkle." Michael Iachetta's Daily News review said, "The play was presented against the perfect historical backdrop - Irving's restored home is candlelit and the paths about Sunnyside are illuminated by lanterns with period costumed guides waiting to take you on a tour."



Sunnyside When Washington Irving lived at Sunnyside, his country retreat along the Hudson in Tarrytown, it was recognized as one of the famous homes in America. You will discover it today, restored to its original magnificence.

City's Cabarets Sparkle With Music, Nostalgia and Satire

By JOHN S. WILSON

As the Democrats begin their convention at Madison Square Garden, political satirists have zeroed in on New York for a convention of their own. Mort Sahl, the scourge of the '50s, is back in town smacking a newspaper on his knee at the Bird Cage in Michael's Pub. Mark Russell has come up from his permanent roost at the Shoreham in Washington to spread his expertise at the Rainbow Grill. A gathering of improvisationists has moved into the Bottom Line where, billed simply as "The Convention," they will give their interpretations of events at the other convention night by night. And local comics, who keep trying out material at the Improvisation and Catch a Rising Star, are riffling through their files of politician bits.

Mr. Sahl's appearance at the Bird Cage, 211 East 55th Street, tonight, tomorrow and next week, Tuesday through Saturday, marks the first time he has performed in a New York club in more than two years. He is at the convention for the National Broadcasting Company, reporting each morning on the "Today" show as well as revealing his insights at night at the Bird Cage.

"It's going to be a good year for me," Mr. Sahl said the other day, anticipating this convention and the Republican follow-up in Kansas City, which he will also cover. "But I don't know about the country."

Mark Russell has been such a permanent fixture at the Shoreham in Washington in recent years that he rarely leaves the capitol except to appear at banquets. His visit to the Rainbow Grill, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, from tonight until Saturday, July 17, is his first New York night-club engagement since he was at the Playboy Club seven years ago, although earlier in the '60s he played the Blue Angel and the Village Vanguard.

On Best Behavior

Despite recent reports of Congressional hanky-panky in Washington (or, more likely, because of them), Mr. Russell anticipates that the convention delegates will be on their best behavior while they are in New York.

"The girls in Times Square had better anticipate this," Mr. Russell said. "In fact, that's how they can pick a running mate for the President, Udall, Church and Brown all walk down Times Square and the first one that's solicited is Vice President." The Bottom Line, 15 West 4th Street, is featuring Janet Coleman and David Dozer, writers and performers with a background in improvisational theater who did the "Eugenes" for Senator Eugene McCarthy in 1968 and a counterinaugural for (or against) former President Richard M. Nixon in 1972. They have revived political satire cabaret, which has languished since the days of The Premise, Second City and The Compass, with all of which Mr. Dozer performed.

Their newly formed group, "The Convention," opens tonight amid bunting, balloons and flags with welcoming speeches, roll calls, nominations and whatever other trappings the real convention produces.

"If anything happens at the real convention—and I hope it does," said Mr. Dozer, "it will be paralleled at the Bottom Line."

Members of the audience at this counterconvention will receive credentials as delegates. Guests who have been invited (Louise Lasser, Robert Klein, Severn Darden and Barbara Harris have expressed interest but made no promises) may be nominated (for anything). Bill Weeden and Dave Finkle have been at work writing convention-type songs. They have already set the Democratic platform to music and have created a roll-call song.

Meanwhile, the comedians who normally inhabit the Improvisation, Ninth Avenue at 44th Street, and Catch a Rising Star, 1487 First Avenue, are turning more attention than usual to political satire, running a gamut of styles that one knowledgable observer describes as "from Lenny Bruce to Mort Sahl."

The Statler-Hilton Hotel, which is in a particularly strategic location for conventioneers, right across Seventh Avenue from Madison Square Garden, is removing the giant TV screen from its Penn Bar, which had been the room's entertainment attraction, replacing it with a real live singing pianist, Randy Taylor, who will sing and play there nightly until 3 A.M. The screen has been moved to the Donkey Den where it has been set up to carry live convention coverage.

Other entertainment spots that are taking special note of the convention include the After Ten Room in the Drake Hotel, 56th Street at Park Avenue, where Albert and Renee Hague have been brushing up on the score of George Gershwin's "Of Thee I Sing," the Pulitzer Prize-winning musical about a Presidential campaign, adding its songs to their customary repertory of show tunes. At Sirocco, a Middle Eastern cabaret at 29 East 29th Street, Aris San, the owner and star of the show there, who was born in Greece, is adding a Salute to the Democrats to his program, noting that it was the Greeks who gave them the basis for their name. And at Bar None, 167 East 33d Street, the first ten delegates to arrive each day after the room opens at noon will receive a free drink.

Wide Choice of Clubs

For conventioneers looking for entertainment from the pre-rock era after a night at the Garden, there are jazz clubs and cabarets galore to choose from. Just in time for the convention, Bricktop, the celebrated nightclub hostess in Paris during the '20s and '30s whose club kept a table permanently reserved for Cole Porter, will move into Clio, 1 Lincoln Plaza, on Tuesday, July 13, with Jimmie Daniels, who sang with her in Europe, Sylvia di Giorgio, another singer, and Stewart Hart, a singing pianist.

At Cafe Carlyle, Madison Avenue at 76th Street, Bobby Short sings his sophisticated repertory from Tuesday through Saturday. Margaret Whiting, who was singing "Moonlight in Vermont" in the late '40s, is at the Grand Finale, 210 West 70th Street, this weekend through Sunday and Kaye Ballard, the singing comedienne, moves in on Tuesday. Barbara Cook, Broadway's favorite ingenue in the '50s and '60s, is singing at Brothers and Sisters, 355 West 46th Street, Wednesdays through Saturdays, and Susan Watson, who succeeded Miss Cook as the ingenue queen, is at the Ballroom, 458 West Broadway, Mondays through Saturdays.

Another veteran of Broadway musicals, Helen Gallagher, will be at Once Upon a Stove, Third Avenue at 26th Street, from Tuesday until Saturday, and Lainie Kazan, who once succeeded Barbra Streisand in the title role of the Broadway version of "Funny Girl," is singing at the Rainbow Grill, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, from Monday through Saturday.

For jazz singing, there are the colorful blues and ballads of Helen Humes at The Cookery, University Place at 8th Street, Monday through Saturday, the sophisticated swing of Teddi King at Stryker's, 103 West 86th Street, tonight and tomorrow, and the old-time blues of Mabel Godwin at Arthur's Tavern, 57 Grove Street, Tuesday through Saturday.

Jazz is available in a variety of styles. For followers of traditional jazz and swing, these are some of the choices:

Eddie Condon's, 144 West 54th Street, where Balaban and Cats play Monday through Saturday nights with Red Richards as intermission pianist, while on Wednesday at noon clarinetist Bob Sparkman leads a jam session in which anyone can join and on Fridays Ed Polcer's Pacers play for lunch.

A few doors west on 54th Street is Jimmy Ryan's, a jazz club that is approaching its 40th birthday, where trumpeter Roy Eldridge leads the band Monday through Saturday and another trumpeter, Max Kaminsky, takes over the stand on Sunday.

At the West End Cafe, Broadway at 114th Street, the names keep changing but the action remains solid swing era in style. Franc Williams, a trumpet veteran of the Duke Ellington band, leads a quartet on Monday and Tuesday; Jo Jones, the original drummer in Count Basie's band, is on the stand on Wednesday; on Thursday and Friday, trumpeter Ed Lewis covers a lot of territory with his Swing to Bop Quartet; and on Saturday and Sunday, two more Basie veterans—saxophonists Buddy Tate and Paul Quinichette—are in charge.

New Orleans and Swing

For New Orleans style jazz, there is the New Orleans Funeral and Ragtime Band (led by clarinetist Woody Allen whenever he is in town) on Mondays at Michael's Pub, 211 East 55th Street, and Graham Stewart's New Orleans Jazz Band on Thursdays at Fugue, 275 First Avenue. For those whose taste runs more to Chicago jazz of the '20s, the Grove Street Stompers specialize in it on Monday nights at Arthur's Tavern, 57 Grove Street, and the Original Traditional Jazz Band borders on it on Wednesdays at Patch's Inn, 317 East 70th Street, while jazz and vaudeville come gloriously together in Cathy Chamberlain's "Rag 'n' Roll Revue" at Reno Sweeney, 126 West 13th Street, a company that includes Kenny Davern on soprano saxophone and the volatile blues shouter and drummer, Freddie Moore.

Closer to the swing era are the goings-on at Gregory's, First Avenue at 63d Street, where Gene Roland, a one-time Stan Kenton trumpeter, leads a trio Monday through Saturday from 6 P.M. to 9 P.M., pianist Brooks Lerr heads an Ellingtonian trio later in the evening, Wednesday through Sunday, and Warren Chiasson, a vibraharpist from George Shearing's quintet, is in charge on the later shift Sunday through Tuesday.

There are several big bands in town, too, mostly on one-nighters. On Monday, Dave Matthews's band is at Strykers, 103 West 86th Street, and Bill Watrous's band is at the Village Vanguard, Seventh Avenue at 11th Street. On Tuesday, Dick Cone's band moves into Willy's, 7 West 8th Street, while on Saturdays Monty Waters's big band plays a 4-7 P.M. gig at Ladies Fort, 2 Bond Street. The only big band working regularly during the week is trombonist Warren Covington's group at the Rainbow Room, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, Tuesday through Saturday.

What to See On and Off Broadway

By MEL GUSSOW

Delegates who could shift their attention from politics to theater had an opportunity to buy tickets in advance to "A Chorus Line," "California Suite" and other popular shows for convention week. The convention's Citizens Committee, in cooperation with the League of New York Theaters, set aside 100 seats to every show for every performance from July 10-16, and a total of more than 20,000 tickets were available for purchase by delegates.

This means that there are a lot more chances for you. Although, to no one's surprise, "A Chorus Line" sold out, tickets to a number of shows were returned to the box office and are still available. A few shows are planning special performances to attract visitors.

"The Royal Family," for example, has scheduled matinees Tuesday and Thursday.

So here is a critical rundown on what is playing on and off Broadway this week:

At the end of the season, Broadway has suddenly become a musical playground. Many dramas and comedies opened during the season—and most of them have closed. Of the 26 shows surviving on Broadway—those that have already opened and the two in previews—18 are musicals.

The Old and the New

The musicals range from the hot, black nostalgia of "Bubbling Brown Sugar" to the high-button white nostalgia of "Very Good Eddie," from new shows that look like old shows ("Shenandoah") to old shows that look like new shows ("The Threepenny Opera"), and include three classics of the modern American musical theater—"My Fair Lady," "Guys and Dolls" and "Pal Joey."

Unquenchably, the best musical of the season—of several seasons—is "A Chorus Line," and convention delegates fortunate enough to obtain tickets to it have as big a windfall as they will find in New York in a hot July. "A Chorus Line" is—once more, for the record—Michael Bennett's fondly affectionate but rueful salute to the gypsies in the chorus from whence he came. This Pulitzer-Prize winner is a free-flowing blend of intimate story, music, lyrics, and, especially, dance—a show to see again and again.

While "A Chorus Line" charts new streams for the musical theater, "My Fair Lady" reminds one of a time when shows were romantic and very musical. Anyone who has seen "Pygmalion" recently (the Wendy Hiller film) will realize that Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe's "My Fair Lady" is not only a complete realization of the play, but, with lyrics and music tuned to Bernard Shaw's ear, it is also an extension of the original. The new cast, headed by Ian Richardson and George Rose, is a strong one, and in fine singing voice.

"Bubbling Brown Sugar" is a study in performance—a tribute to the singers and dancers who played the Cotton Club and the Savoy in Harlem in the 20's. "The Wiz" is a larky, inside-out look at a white myth, "The Wizard of Oz." The show is exuberant family fun. "Me and Bessie" is Linda Hopkins's impersonation of Bessie Smith, a rare chance to hear Bessie's blues, live.

Bob Fosse has two hits on Broadway, "Pippin" and "Chicago." Each, especially "Chicago," is a compendium of Fosse and of the American musical. The essential "Pippin" was the show's long-running, one-minute television commercial (the commercial closed; the show thrives). The essential moment in "Chicago" is the song "Razzle Dazzle," in which Mr. Fosse baldly states that underneath the glitter is more glitter. The show is shallow, but Mr. Fosse is a most imaginative choreographer, and his star, Gwen Verdon, is a grand musical lady.

More Favorites

Besides "Pippin" and "Chicago," "Godspell" and "Grease" are also audience favorites. The popularity of "Grease" continues to amaze me. When it first opened Off Broadway years ago, it seemed a flashy, vulgar send-up of the Elvis Presley generation. By now, it has become an artifact of the 50's. Both "Grease" and "Godspell" are aimed at and embraced by the young and impressionable.

The most unmusical of the musicals is "The Magic Show." "The Magic Show" is . . . a magic show, and is fortunate to have as its star the extraordinary Doug Henning (his greatest trick probably was to transform this tabby cat of a show into a hit). The pre-"Grease" crowd loves Mr. Henning.

In the Bicentennial year, there was bound to be one American historical—in this case a Civil War—musical. "Shenandoah," which actually has been running since last season. The show is homespun and sentimental, but John Cullum gives a stalwart performance as a patriotic pacifist, and at least one Gary Geld-Peter Udell song, "Freedom," is a favorite at school assemblies.

"Very Good Eddie" is an unpretentious cameo, an ancient Guy Bolton-Jerome Kern musical staged, in period, without condescension and with fresh, appealing actors.

While "Threepenny Opera" hypnotizes audiences at the Beaumont, downstairs in Lincoln Center at the Newhouse, David Rabe's "Streamers," the best American drama of the season, offers its own act of harrowing passion. Draftees on the way to war are seen, comically and tragically, in a compressed, compacted environment. The play is violent and shocking, forcefully staged by Mike Nichols and acted with great authenticity and conviction.

Few other dramas have survived. From last season there is "Equus," Peter Shaffer's psychological mystery dazzlingly staged by John Dexter. This season there is "The Runner Stumbles," an auspicious first play by Milan Stitt about a priest accused of murdering a nun.

When zestfully revived, old plays wear well, the best example being "The Royal Family," a joyful re-evocation of the George S. Kaufman-Edna Ferber toast to the Barrymores (with Rosemary Harris giving a particularly high-style performance).

"The Belle of Amherst" is Julie Harris pretending to be Emily Dickinson, trapped in a world of her own devising, leading us fascinatingly (but fitfully) over the carpet-covered corners of her personal and artistic life.

"Same Time, Next Year," Bernard Slade's Neil Simonish comedy hit, is still running, now starring Sandy Dennis and Ted Bessell as long-running adulterers. "California Suite," a real Neil Simon, is that artful humorist's latest hit, applying the "Plaza Suite" syndrome (four separate sketches, one hotel room) to the Beverly Hills Hotel.

In addition to "A Chorus Line," and his productions at Lincoln Center, producer Joseph Papp has "Henry V" rousing his men to arms in Central Park (free Shakespeare at the Delacorte Theater) and "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide/When the Rainbow is Enuf," a collage of black experience that amassed some of the most enthusiastic reviews of the season, downtown at the Public Theater.

"Eden" is an interesting new play by Steve Carter, a kind of black "Hester Street." "Boy Meets Boy" is a giddy homosexual inversion of "Boy Meets Girl." "Women Behind Bars" is an outrageous Tom Eyen jape at movies about women in prison. And "The Fantasticks" is the "The Fantasticks." It opened in 1960 when Eisenhower was President. And it may still be running when the next convention comes to New York.

"Tuscaloosa's Calling Me," a jubilantly upbeat musical ode to the wonders (and some of the ordeals) of city living, should be given out free to all convention visitors. Actually delegates and their families are receiving a 20 percent discount.

Where to Get Tickets

Following are some recommended shows that at press time had some seats available:

Eleanor Perry And Martin Ransohoff One Decade Later

TEN OR 11 years ago, Eleanor Perry, who was then doing some film reviewing as well as writing screenplays, delivered a fierce judgment on "The Sandpiper." It starred Elizabeth Taylor and was produced by Martin Ransohoff.

There was fairly general critical agreement that "Sandpiper" was a lead soufflé, but Mr. Ransohoff's anger concentrated upon Mrs. Perry. He protested to Life magazine, which ran her review, arguing among other things that screenwriters had no business reviewing films. In addition, the word around Hollywood on Mr. Ransohoff's frame of mind was that if he and Mrs. Perry ever found themselves together on a desert island, he would jump off. Or push her.

A decade is a long time in the film business—long enough for a remake, though perhaps not of "The Sandpiper"—but Mrs. Perry is going around these days with a feeling that she has just been pushed.

Late last year, Michel Legrand, a Frenchman who has written a lot of successful music for movies and wants to direct one, bought a book called "Blind Love." Mr. Legrand enlisted Nat Shapiro as a co-producer and hired Mrs. Perry to write the screenplay.

After her first version was finished, Mrs. Perry met with Mr. Legrand in France on her way back from the Cannes Film Festival. According to her and to Mr. Shapiro, the meeting went well. There was general agreement on the work so far and on changes needed in a new version.

All this time, after the collapse of one tentative agreement, Mr. Legrand was seeking financing. A week or so after the script meeting, Mr. Shapiro said, he got a call from Mr. Legrand's agent, Al Bart. He said Mr. Bart told him that financing had been arranged but with one essential condition: Mrs. Perry must go. The source of the financing: Martin Ransohoff and his associate, Frank Yablans.

According to Mr. Ransohoff, it was Mr. Legrand who wanted Mrs. Perry out. (Mr. Shapiro says he asked Mr. Legrand about this, and Mr. Legrand denied it.) Mr. Ransohoff says he hasn't read Mrs. Perry's script, but that if he had thought it was a good one he wouldn't have let her criticism of "Sandpiper" stand in the way. "On the other hand," he added, "I probably wouldn't have gone out and hired her."

Mr. Shapiro, who says he was stunned, has left the project. Mrs. Perry says she is amused but agrees she is also stunned. She has been paid for her work to date, but will keep an eye out for any ideas of hers appearing in whatever movie is eventually made. If any do, this would give her a new claim.

As for Mr. Legrande, he said he didn't know what he would do. He might, he said, even hire Mrs. Perry back. He declined, in any case, to clarify the conflicting versions of who pushed her. "There is no truth anywhere," he said. "There is no lie anywhere."

Sitting in one room of the grand, spooked-up Brooklyn Heights house he is using for his new movie, "The Sentinel," Michael Winner ate meat loaf and talked about horror techniques.

"The great difficulty," he said, "is that horror is more real when you read about it. Your imagination conjures up the most harrowing fantasies. In a movie you are conjuring up the director's fantasies, and there's no room for imagination. It's all right to do creaky stairs and let the audience anticipate what's to come, but then you have to actually show what's to come."

The solution for Mr. Winner, who made "Death Wish" and other notably violent pictures, is to show something as horrible as possible at the end of those creaky stairs. He will try to do it in "Sentinel," his own contribution to the wave of Satan films that collectively might be labeled Rosemary's grandchildren.

"I've got one scene I think has never been attempted," he said. "The forces of evil gather, and it looks like a Hieronymus Bosch army. Now this is very difficult on the basis of the more you show the sillier it looks, but we've got a certain course of action that will overcome it."

One consistently pleasant bit of summer moviegoing is being offered at the Regency Theater, which is putting on a series of films turned out by the Warner Brothers studio, 30 to 40 years ago. "The Sea Hawk," "Gunga Din," "The Maltese Falcon," among many others and, of course, "Casablanca."

"You know I have a 3-mm. projector at home, and when I have guests, I offer to let them see any new film they want. I have pretty good connections in the industry. And usually what they want to see is 'Casablan

The speaker is Hal Wallis. He is not turni the Regency festival. He has been retrospectiviz kind of vanishing point of inner patience — tin central figure. He was head of production at Wa ing those memorable years.

Mr. Wallis, who is in his 70's, remains an ducer. He has various projects in preparation day" (a successor to "True Grit" and "Rooster and "White Water" (based on the book by P and to be directed by Jan Kadar) are two of th minent.

Richard G. Roth, on the other hand, hasn' but hopes to. He is in his mid-30's and is pr first movie; and since every producer has, by d produce a first movie at some point, this would be remarkable.

But Mr. Roth, in a business that is not ne to give much confidence or money to beginners unusually impressive-looking package together pressive movie packages turn out empty; but least has the first part of an achievement.

His production of "Julia," based on a sto Hellman from her book "Pentimento," will be in September. It is to be directed by Fred Zi screenplay is by Alvin Sargent, who did "P and is not short of work, and the cast inclu Redgrave, Jane Fonda, Hal Holbrook and Schell. It is being financed and released by 2 Fox.

Mr. Roth has worked around movies for s only up to the level of an assistant producer, equivalent to Army captain or second-string He got the rest of the way, he says, by parlayi initial asset.

Two years ago, when he read "Julia"—w the strange reappearance in Miss Hellman's hi hood friend—it struck him as offering a rare o make a movie with good women's parts. He buy the story.

Jane Fonda heard he owned it and appr he said. Holding the Misses Hellman and Fo vinced Mr. Sargent, a friend, to agree to do th Holding Hellman, Fonda and Sargent, he coul put up the money. Hellman, Fonda, Sarge amounted to a lot of conviction, not to men money. There was no great trouble convincin man, Miss Redgrave, Mr. Holbrook and so on.

On June 25, 1976, a major motion picture was released which has, in just a few days, struck a deep emotional chord across the entire country.

From millions of men and women, from young and old alike, from families and people from all walks of life, from regular movie-goers to people who haven't seen a film in years, the reaction is unanimous.

It is the nation's number one hit because it has touched something in all of us.

For those of you who haven't seen it yet, we urge you to do just one thing.

Ask anyone who's seen it.

Any one.

"A PURE DELIGHT. Highly enjoyable...' fanciful spirit, surrealism, and sheer magic. A work of art that explores the creative instinct with ingenuity and insight. It brilliantly wends its way between the worlds of the writer and his creations."

The New York Times

"TIPPECANOE and Tyler too." I croak for the Webster wagon." "Don't change horses in the middle of the stream." "A chicken in every pot." "Life, libery and Landon." "All the way with LBJ." For more than a century, such slogans have added zest to political campaigns. They have also produced brisk business for manufacturers of the sort of buttons and broadsides on view in a colorful and timely exhibition at Bonwit Teller, Fifth Avenue at 56th Street, and in specialty antiques shops everywhere.

Actually, the always catchy, mostly corny and sometimes witty political advertisements have attracted legions of collectors in recent years—thousands more in fact, with each Presidential campaign. These enthusiasts are reported to be so determined to acquire more and more examples of these rallying symbols, that even in years without Presidential elections, prices keep soaring.

"I've never seen some of these pieces before," insisted Jeffrey Lyons, an avid political-button collector and film critic for WPIX-TV, marveling at the array of Presidential winners and losers assembled for the Bonwit Teller show. The exhibition, on view on the store's sixth floor through July 17, can be seen Monday through Saturday, 10 A.M. to 6 P.M., and Thursday until 8 P.M.

Among the 297 selections from the Susan H. Douglas collection on loan to the store from Cornell University, there are, Mr. Lyons said, some remarkable examples. He admired, for instance, rare Horace Greeley memorabilia and praised the premium quality of most of what Mrs. Douglas had collected—designs from the 1840's through the 1940's.

'Sons of New York'

Mr. Lyons went on to suggest that the collection, titled "Sons of New York: Reflections of the Campaign Trail" (the Douglas collection focused on figures from this state), might well be impossible to duplicate today. The collection, numbering more than 5,500 pieces, was formed over a 20-year period from 1940 on, and Mrs. Douglas bequeathed it to Cornell, her husband, Damon's, alma mater. It is normally stored in one of the university's libraries.

Much to the collector's delight, campaign buttons dominate in this exhibition. But for nonexperts other forms of political propaganda included here may be even more interesting. There are, for instance, fabrics, scarves, posters, sheet music, an imitation-beaver hat, a parade torch, a paperweight, drinking glass, mug, pitcher and automobile licenses bearing the names of Franklin D. Roosevelt and other candidates.

Mr. Lyons lingered over the elaborately framed James A. Garfield buttons. They are, he said, quite different from modern buttons on which slogans or candidate photographs or names are printed on the metal surfaces.

Campaign buttons first appeared in 1896, and with the exception of the shapes (ovals are no longer popular), very little has changed since. Before the William McKinley versus William Jennings Bryan campaign however, there were some extraordinary conceptions—candidate photographs or slogans were framed in eagles or gilt metal and were designed to be worn as brooches or stickpins.

Deluxe Memorabilia

The politically potent folk-art sculpture in the window of Ann Phillips's shop, at 899 Madison Avenue, near 72d Street (open Monday through Saturday, 11 A.M. was carved after a Thomas Nast cartoon. It balking donkey hauling a cart in which two passengers sit dangling a stick labeled "promis the donkey on.

Although the sculpture is one of the m expressions of a political idea seen recently, it w stir collectors far less than, say, the Andrew J Daniel Webster snuffboxes offered by Mrs. Phi superbly crafted papier mâché designs sell for $3

And there's more. The canes with white of Benjamin Harrison and Grover Cleveland, a and the Bryan match safe (it's silver plate, at $150, are most engaging.

"I don't think it's the Bicentennial or t this year that has stirred such interest," Mrs. I "Politics is for everyone—at least in this co And the collectors in this field do not seem the material in nonelection years."

Mrs. Phillips's stock—possibly the most co in this field—will help explain why. The vari ning. Included are a selection of bandannas and a Garfield paper lantern (at $150 and $85 r a Cleveland ashtray ($55), an umbrella m George Washington ($185), a McKinley pitche a Teddy Roosevelt wind-up clock ($175). In ad are games (one is called In the White Hou of pamphlets, stereopticon slides and a selecti from Harper's magazine.

A cast-iron frog with "I croak for the Jack stamped on its back is, Mrs. Phillips explaine those made for Daniel Webster.

Only about 10 Jackson frogs survive, she is one reason this weighty doorstop comma price—$650. There may be another reason why version fetches better prices than the Webster.

"In this field collectors prefer winners," observed firmly. "The also-rans never do as wel

Cabins and Elephants

Robert Zucker agrees. Mr. Zucker special paign buttons and other 20th-century adverti as a sideline of his business, Park-East Move 82d Street. (He is usually in his office-shop Mor Saturday, 8 A.M. to 6 P.M.) There he sits su floor-to-ceiling a displays of, among other grap esting trivia, campaign buttons from McKir Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter. For mos he has at least several buttons to offer, most $5 or $10, and virtually none are over $100.

One of the most unusual offerings is a W Harrison log-cabin-shape lapel pin at $45. Bu cule Dwight D. Eisenhower brass elephant engaging, too, and less costly at $4.

Mr. Zucker stocks more than buttons. Th S. Truman beanie at $15, a Lyndon B. John pen at $10 and doll, also $10 (or 10 times was made to sell for in 1964). Mr. Zucker automobile licenses, too. There are two Hoov $7.50 and $10, and a Franklin Roosevelt pla city will be contained in a corrugated attaché case designed by several of the city's larger retailers. This will be placed in each delegate's room before he or she checks in. There is a variety of special services offered by department stores, reduced admission tickets to the Whitney Museum, a guest pass to the Metropolitan Museum of Art and a reduced price admission ticket to the Empire State Building Observation Deck.

The Citizens Committee case also contains brochures with information on mass transit, hotels, restaurants and guides to the city's more famous attractions — the World Trade Center, South Street Seaport, Rockefeller Center and Radio City Music Hall, Lincoln Center, Yankee Stadium and Shea Stadium, the Staten Island Ferry, the theater district, Central Park, Fifth Avenue shops, the Museum of Modern Art and the United Nations. And there will be a "Social Calendar" as well detailing as completely as possible every public event, every cultural or theatrical performance and sports show in the city for convention week.

In addition to the various bus and boat tours, the delegates will also be offered a series of five tours specifically designed for children—to the Statue of Liberty and South Street Seaport, Chinatown and downtown, the Bronx Zoo, Rockefeller Center and the Museum of Natural History and Hayden Planetarium — these will leave Monday through Thursday from F.A.O. Schwarz at Fifth Avenue and 58th Street. The cost is $15 for each child for each tour; and arrangements and times can be obtained by calling the New York Classroom, 734-3654.

Hosts and Hostesses

The Citizens Committee, operating on a $200,000 budget, is also responsible for officially welcoming the delegates, for arranging for the hosts and hostesses who — in their red-and-white striped vests—will be on hand at each hotel from 8 A.M. to 8 P.M. to answer questions, arrange bus and car tours, set up theater parties and make restaurant reservations.

The Citizens Committee has also arranged to have doctors and lawyers on 24-hour volunteer emergency duty each day of the convention, according to Jacqueline Kogan, the assistant director of the Citizens Committee. They will be available through the hosts and hostesses.

The city is spending more than $3.5 million on the convention — $1.9 million for rental of Madison Square Garden, $1.4 million for construction of convention facilities within the Garden, and $215,000 for an insurance premium. It is also renting a commercial garage on 31st Street for the Democratic National Committee for the week for $28,000 and has contracted for 90 private buses to bring delegates from the airports to their hotels at a cost of $95,000.

The Metropolitan Transportation Authority is spending another $220,000 to provide shuttle bus service from hotels to the Garden. A Justice Department grant of $2.6 million will pay for expected Police Department overtime during convention week.

According to Mr. Tisch, the free public service advertisements donated by companies on behalf of the Citizens Committee and the convention have been valued at $1 million. The delegate kits have cost $100,000. The Hilton Hotel brunch on Monday to be given by the Citizens Committee will cost $35,000. And the host-and-hostess program, where couples have direct responsibilities to individual state delegations, is being paid for by the volunteer hosts themselves.

For New Yorkers the badge on the lapel of a delegate will be a signal for special attention, and both department stores and smaller retailers have briefed their staffs accordingly. The badge will also be recognized for on-the-spot discounts in some stores, immediate seating in many restaurants, and will help delegates to avoid lines at movie houses.

The 5,000 delegates, their 4,000 wives and husbands their 500 children, the 1,000 diplomatic observers, the 2,000 invited guests of Mr. Strauss, the 7,800 reporters and technicians covering the convention and the city are being invited, Deputy Mayor Friedman said, "to see the city as it is."

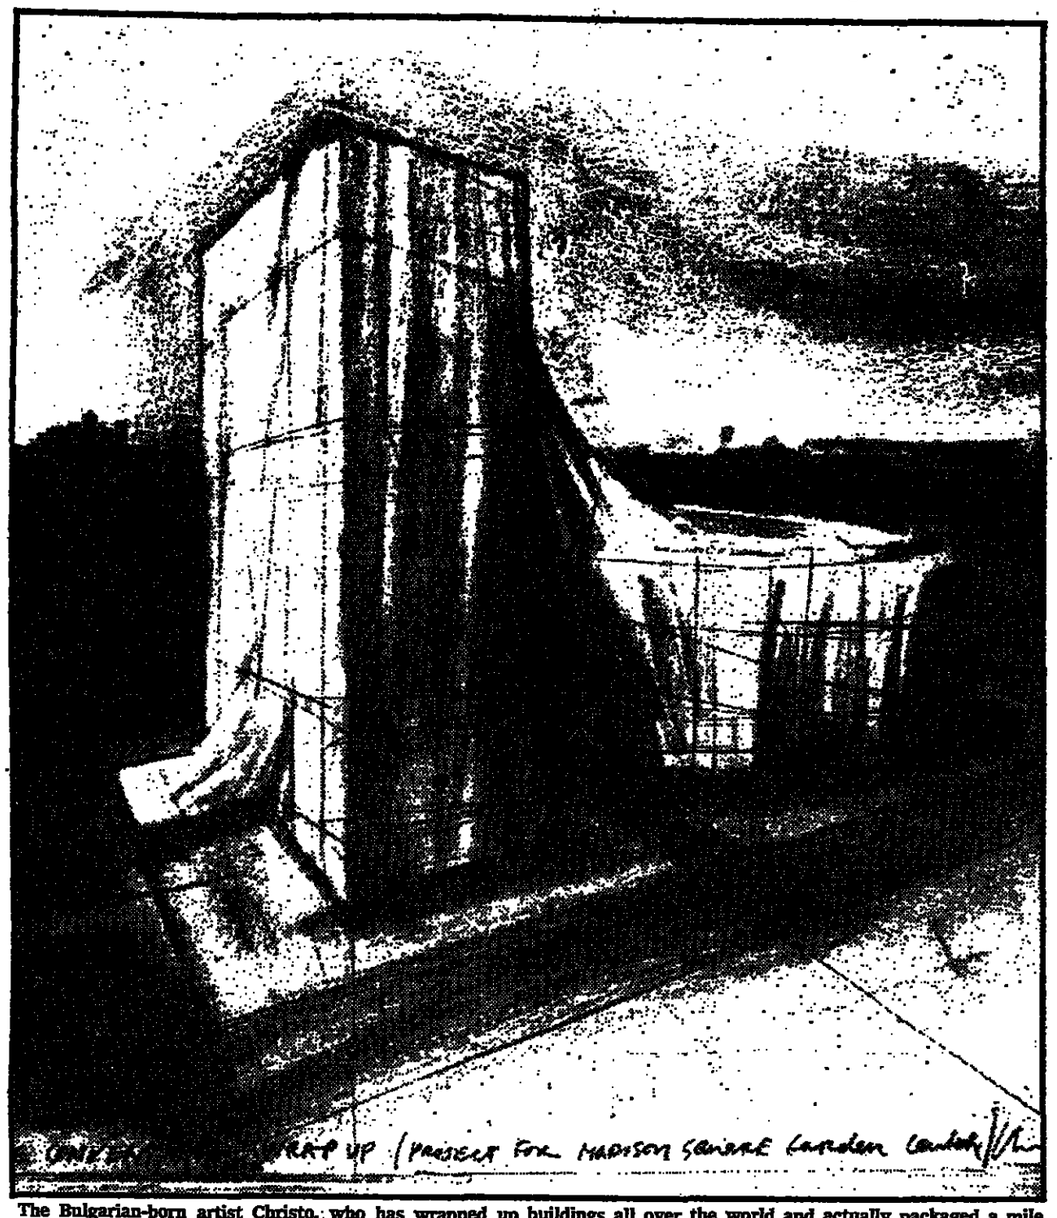
Charles Gillett, president of the Convention and Visitors Bureau, predicts that the visiting conventioneers will spend about $8 million while they are here, which he says will have a ripple effect amounting to $20 million citywide. And the benefits to the city's economy will not be the only boon. For those of us who live here the convention will be an ideal time to enjoy the city.

While the special events are for delegates only, a careful politician watcher and celebrity chaser can have some inexpensive fun waiting for Jimmy Carter to come out of the Americana and Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Jr. to come out of the McAlpin.

Other prominent delegates and their hotels are Edmund S. Muskie at the Gotham, Robert Byrd at the Americana, Hubert H. Humphrey at the Waldorf-Astoria, Frank Church and Fred R. Harris at the Biltmore, Henry M. Jackson at the Warwick, Morris K. Udall at the Roosevelt and George C. Wallace at the New York Hilton. Most, or all of these men, many of whom are Vice-Presidential possibilities, will pass through the headquarters hotel, the Statler Hilton across from Madison Square Garden.

But for those who just like to enjoy the city, they'll be able to see the Empire State Building with a red, white and blue lighted crown every night of the convention, to see hundreds of red, silvery-white and blue balls glittering in front of Burlington House, and the buntings, banners and floral decorations on New York commercial buildings remaining from the July 4 festivities.

And there is the delightful possibility that you will be thought of as a delegate—or a wife or a husband—and be smiled upon and fawned over. That alone is a good reason to come to New York during Convention Week.



The Bulgarian-born artist Christo, who has wrapped up buildings all over the world and actually packaged a mile of rocky Australian beach in plastic film, shows here his project for a wrap-up of Madison Square Garden.

Metropolitan Baedeker

Around a Garden Called Madison Sq.

By MICHAEL STERNE

ANY MORNING at 9 o'clock, anyone who takes the trouble to stand for a few minutes at the corner of Seventh Avenue and 33d Street will be able to grasp immediately what the neighborhood he or she is in is all about.

At that hour, an observer will see thousands of men and women, many carrying attaché cases as symbols of executive labor, crossing the avenue in a stream so thick it sometimes stops traffic as they stride purposefully toward their workingplaces in midtown Manhattan. The source of this stream is a hole deep below Madison Square Garden, the terminus of the Long Island Rail Road, where every working day between 7 and 10 A.M. the trains disgorge 52,000 people.

Many thousands more are arriving at about the same time by the Penn Central Railroad, which also has a terminal below the Garden; by the Port Authority Trans Hudson system, with a station one block away; by the city's three major subway lines, all with express stations within a block of the Garden, and by a dozen bus lines that stop near the Garden's front and back doors.

The convergence here of all these transportation lines makes this neighborhood one of the great hubs of the New York region. And though New Yorkers, residents and commuters alike, complain bitterly of the physical and psychic abuse they suffer on their daily trips to work—the panic of overpacked cars; the frustration of unexplained delays; the ugliness of graffiti-scarred trains; the used-up atmosphere of the platforms, chilling in winter, sweltering in summer—they also concede, on considered judgment, that the system is a remarkably efficient way of moving hundreds of thousands of people in and out of a small space.

Everything within that space, that is, within a dozen blocks of the Garden, is there because being close to the transportation hub puts it in touch with great agglomerations of people. Thus, this is not a neighborhood where people live, although a few do in its fringes; high traffic means high rents, and residential use cannot sustain them. But here, in bewildering variety, are the means to shop; to bolt a meal; to sojourn on a visit; to have film developed; to bank money; to bet on a horse race; to see the whole of the city from a building-top aerie; to cheer the Rangers on to another goal on the ice, and to work.

East of the Garden is New York's busiest shopping center; north is the garment district; west is the General Post Office and what remains of the old Hell's Kitchen tenements; south is the wholesale-flower market. All hold attractions for visitors.

A century and a quarter ago, the neighborhood that sustains all these activities was a section of farms and country estates. Rapid development began in the years just before the Civil War, when the old Hudson River Railroad, which ran along what is now 11th Avenue, pushed north and established a station at 30th Street. The railroad brought enterprise, and soon the farms gave way to lumberyards, brickyards, lime kilns, stables, warehouses, distilleries, glass-bottle factories and slaughterhouses.

The tenements that housed the workers in these businesses also sheltered vicious gangs whose names have become legends in the city—the Hell's Kitchen Boys, the Gophers, the Parlor Mob. They victimized one another from time to time, but their favorite targets were the railroad and its passengers.

By the 1880's, the area from Fifth to Seventh Avenue had become what one clergyman deplored as "the modern Gomorrah." This was the so-called "tenderloin district," where half the buildings were devoted to vice and where there were said to be more prostitutes than churchgoers.

The northward march of the city's population began pushing out the poor, and by

7 Artists View New York

The spirit of New York, contemporary art capital of the world, is often best expressed by the internationally known artists who live here. To these artists, inevitably, New York is a source of inspiration, and for this conventiongoers' issue of Weekend, The New York Times asked seven artists to convey their special relationship with local people and places. The drawings on these pages are the results. They have been done by Christo, Red Grooms, Robert Indiana, David Levine, Philip Pearlstein, Larry Rivers and James Rosenquist.

A Walker in Baghdad-on-the-Hudson

By McCANDLISH PHILLIPS

To the strangers who will be within our gates these next days on great affairs of state, greetings.

You are about to have the Manhattan experience. Relax. You are extremely unlikely to be mugged. (Keep out of Central Park after 11 o'clock at night and stay away from Eighth Avenue from about 39th Street to about 48th Street as much as you can, and you will run your survival chances up from about 99.9 percent to around 99.999999.)

Our reputation as the hairiest town in the East is not entirely undeserved, but it is exaggerated.

I have been living in this city—smack on Broadway mostly, overlooking the air-intake gratings of the IRT subway line—365 days a year since 1952, and I have never fallen on a curbstone and skinned my kneecaps, or suffered any worse injury or insult. There are millions like me. We are the living. The dead have nothing to say.

What I hope for you is that you will have an authentic experience of this great city. It is possible to have an artificial experience of New York—to be in the city but never really to see it as it is, to go from hotel room to convention center to air-conditioned bistro to restaurant to theater to hotel, comfortably wrapped in what I would call the tourist cocoon.

A Big Industry

Tourists are a big industry in New York, and there is a whole system that gets you into Manhattan, takes good and expensive care of you while you are here and gets you back out, all the while effectively shielding you from nearly everything that this city is about.

Know immediately that this city is too much for you to handle. There is too much to see, to do, too much to hear, too much to eat; there are too many places to go and too many options tearing a visitor in too many directions all at once. You can't possibly see it all, tour it all, taste it all.

New York yields fresh surprises nearly every day to those who have lived in it for decades. I find that true, and for the last quarter-century my occupation has been living in New York, walking through it and writing about it.

The Manhattan experience is not infinite in the true mathematical sense, but it certainly outdistances the capacity of any human being to encompass it in his or her lifetime.

I hope to get you to ride a subway express here near the rush hour, to take some walks along paths I will suggest, to browse a while among the teeming dry goods stalls of Orchard Street, to go for a long ride on a city bus and to do some other things, none of which will require a great deal of time, but which will give you in a few hours some real feeling for the city.

Maybe you will buy a corned-beef sandwich and a bottle of Dr. Brown's Cel-Ray tonic in Katz's glorious delicatessen downtown. Or step into Yonah Shimmel's little knishery at 137 East Houston Street. The tonic, by the way, has a taste that is dead-on celery, but there isn't any celery in it.

If you walk from west to east along Canal Street, a main-line crosstown route for truckers, you will discover a marvelous boulevard of gewgaws. If a gasket is an item of bliss in your affections, if you regard a wad of masking tape as one of the higher evidences of civilization, this may be the place for you.

If you go all the way along Canal to Mulberry Street, what will you find at the entrance to Chinatown? A Carvel ice cream store, of course —with a sign that repeats itself in Chinese characters under the English word, and in which you can order a low-calorie treat that is certified kosher. Welcome to New York.

One day, if you can, get up very early, a bit before dawn, perform your ablutions and go outside. There is a freshness upon the city in the early morning, a coolness that seems full of a promise that the day itself only rarely fulfills.

The sun rises officially around 5:30 A.M., but it takes quite a while for it to climb high enough to flood streams in upon the high-rise districts. Until it does, there is a softness to the shadows and a misty gentleness to the first buttery rays that slant across the avenues.

Manhattan is laid out in a pattern of parallel streets. The primary arteries—the avennes—run north or south, while the crosstown streets go east or west.

Many of these avenues and streets have a homogeneous character of their own—they are in a sense special neighborhoods—and if you walk just a block or two away, you may find yourself on what might almost seem the other side of the moon.

The New York skyline tells a truth about this city, but if taken as a whole statement about the city—it is a lie.

From 46th Street north, Park Avenue is a crystal corridor. With one long sweep of the eye, you will see 13 out of 21 buildings with glass skins.

Across 50th Street, the Romanesque exterior of St. Bartholomew's Church stands in elegant disagreement with most of what is around it on the avenue, and it wins the argument. Yet the tall General Electric Building behind it pays its compliments to the church in both color and design—a fine secular amen to its dignified hallelujah.

March of Skyscrpaers

The Avenue of the Americas—which New Yorkers call Sixth Avenue out of what merchants regard as a perverse bent for simplicity over verbosity—is a march of straight-edge skyscrapers from 55th Street south to 45th Street.

But now turn west at 45th Street and walk three blocks over to Ninth Avenue. Explore it from 49th to 34th Street. How the scale has diminished!

Minutes before, you were a thumb-high creature promenading inconspicuously on Sixth Avenue, and you felt small, obscure and unnoticed.

But now you are on Ninth Avenue. This, you can see, is the New York that the skyline speaks not of. Ninth Avenue isn't about you; it's about us. It doesn't exist to impress anybody. But if you look at it, it will tell you a good deal about us, or at least about some of us.

Few parts of New York are dearer than those that are plain, ordinary, time-worn, the dwellings of people who have to earn this week's pay to eat this week's food or pay the rent.

The buildings are mostly three to five stories high. The stores at sidewalk level are called "taxpayers" because the rent on them pays the taxes. Here are tenements, block after block of them, and there are tens and scores of miles like them veining other sections of the city.

Flavors and Aromas

The flavors and aromas that seep from certain stores are sometimes an affliction, sometimes a high delight. Here and there, you see Old World bakeries—Italian and Greek and French—with long loaves of fresh bread piled in the windows. The baking ovens are just beyond the front spaces, where pans of warm and doughy things are set on seductive display.

Meat and fish markets, greengrocers, stores majoring in foods from Italy, the Philippines and the Orient come in sometimes repetitive succession. One store's window displays brown burlap bags filled with roasted coffee beans of differing origins and in various blends.

In the evenings, men in undershirts sit in upper windows, sometimes with beer cans on sills, waiting for any breeze and glad for something to look at, however vacant their gaze.

Passing the Poultry King store the other day, a little after closing time, I saw a window filled with shaved ice with only a cat of the

Stores: A Shopper's Dream in the Fashion Center of the Worl

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Shopping is one of the joys of visits to any great city, even if the primary purpose is business, sightseeing or conventioneering. There's the need to bring a trinket or two to the folks back home, the desire to have a personal memento of the visit, plus the sheer pleasure of acquisition.

New York, which is generally as well set up as Rome, Paris or London to satisfy these needs, is making a special effort to serve convention visitors. A number of stores are easing credit regulations, planning same-day deliveries to hotels and setting up lounges where delegates can use the phones, rest their feet and have a drink.

But the biggest show of all is the flow of fall fashions into the stores from Seventh Avenue, just a few blocks away, as well as from fashion centers all over the world.

In its more frivolous moments, New York refers to itself as the "fashion capital of the world," for which there is some justification. Seventh Avenue has excelled itself with its fall collections, the American look is the dominant one in fashion cities throughout the world and any flashes of brilliance from Europe or elsewhere are usually spotted, ordered and shipped to one New York store or another before the glow has subsided.

Bloomingdale's to Gimbels

The main shopping emporiums in the city form a rough grid with Bloomingdale's, at 59th Street and Lexington Avenue, at the northeast corner and Gimbels, at 32d Street and Seventh Avenue, at the southwest corner. A block south of Bloomingdale's is Alexander's at 58th Street and Lexington. Three blocks west is Bergdorf Goodman at 58th Street and Fifth Avenue. Nearby is Henri Bendel's at 10 West 57th Street, just west of Fifth Avenue.

The shopping then continues along Fifth Avenue, starting with Bonwit Teller at 56th Street, going on to Saks Fifth Avenue at 50th Street, Lord & Taylor at 39th Street and B. Altman at 34th Street.

After Altman's the trail then bears west with the first stop at Ohrbach's, whose entrance is just off Fifth Avenue on 34th Street. Next is Franklin Simon (WI 7-9600) a few doors down, which caters to working girls in the neighborhood. Then comes Macy's on Herald Square, which caters to practically everybody since it's the largest store in the world. Across the street at 1293 Broadway is Korvette (564-7700). Two blocks south on 32d Street is Gimbels.

Each store has its own character and its own ambiance (even if the merchandise sometimes overlaps) and is worth exploring.

Bloomingdale's (355-5900), to start with, is as much a landmark as the Statue of Liberty. It's the place where swinging New Yorkers stop to shop, to see what everyone is wearing, and to learn what designer's name to drop. If a whole area is devoted to a single designer, it's obvious the name's a good one.

There are special shops in the store bearing the names of Yves Saint Laurent, consistently one of the brilliant designers in Paris, and Ralph Lauren, a meteor of American origin whose forte is classic, classy sportswear.

The Saint Laurent flowered peasant skirts ($175), velvet braid-edged jackets ($415) and turtleneck sweaters in 33 colors ($40 and $50) which caused a sensation when they were introduced in Paris a few months ago, are already in stock. So are Lauren's zippered corduroy jackets ($156), gray flannel jumpsuits ($340) and cotton turtleneck sweaters. The turtlenecks only cost $24 and come in 14 colors. Argyle socks and leg warmers and Argyle sleeveless sweaters are things to wear with them, the kind of things Bloomingdale's swingers have their eyes out for.

A sweater-jacket by Anne Klein ($160), neatly ribbed and narrow, complements the brown jumpsuits, culottes and skirts in her collection and would get anyone off on the right route to fall.

Special exhibits that were set up in the store to honor the visit here today of Queen Elizabeth II will be kept up for the conventioneers this week.

The displays, spotted around the store, include upholstered furniture, Wedgwood, antique American silver, London lamps and shirts and ties by Aquascutum, the British raincoat specialists.

Alexander's (593-0880) is for bargain hunters, where the browsing can be as rewarding as a Turkish bazaar. In fact, caftans from Turkey can be found next to embroidered shirts from China and checked ones from Brazil. Raw silk suits made in Hong Kong are an astonishing buy at $49. Black dinner dresses by Victor Costa of Dallas ($85) nuzzle checked shorts and shirt outfits at $30.

The key to shopping here is to stay loose. You never know what your eye will light on, whether it's knitted shirts at $1 on a clearance table or a jersey dress on a rack at $139, a close-out from one of Seventh Avenue's super-chic designer collections.

Fifth Avenue is where stores take their fashion seriously and Bergdorf Goodman (PL 3-7300)) is no exception. Flagship to the fashion industry, it already has a good selection of fall styles on hand in most departments.

Among its current choices from Seventh Avenue: Geoffrey Beene's loose silk tunic shirts ($140), to be worn over pants or skirts, now and through the winter; Robert Janan's two-piece jersey dresses (around $100) in small prints that serve as camouflage in case they pick up spots and Gloria Sachs's knitted tunics with whipstitched edges and pants to match.

Bergdorf's Imports

A lot of Bergdorf's imports have arrived early, including Valerie Louthan's cashmere knitted styles from Scotland, Patricia Roberts's Fair Isle sweaters with their muted colorings from London and Beged-Or's leather and suede styles from Israel.

There's a strong collection of black jersey and crepe dinner dresses as well as man-tailored suits with vests. And to show the Bergdorf people have a lighter side too there are T-shirts at $9 with the United States flag printed on the front. Red, white and blue are the colors, of course.

Henri Bendel (247-1100) is the super-chic store where women who wear size 14 or over are not encouraged. In fact, women who wear size 12 are not encouraged. The clothes are for the super-sleek as well as the venturesome. Almost everything is avant-garde, and a lot of it never makes it into the mainstream.

Soft and Supple Clothing

An overwhelming proportion of the names on the labels these days happen to belong to women, an indication of the growing significance of feminism in fashion. The clothes are overwhelmingly soft, supple and sexy.

The new Sonia Rykiel sweaters include a turtleneck in all the new Rykiel colors (pale gray, taupe, purple, wine, hunter green) which the Bendel people consider a basic wardrobe item at $105. A sweater coat in the same colors runs $275.

Evening clothes in the flexible manner include silk tunics and pants by Wendy Feder, handpainted tunics by Tomala and a variety of styles by Mary McFadden, Holly Harp and Jean Muir.

The tunic and pants outfit is obviously in favor here. Some of the prettiest are in one size that fits everybody —including even a size 12— at $40 to $60; they are in the shop called Cachet on the third floor. These have found their way into the mainstream — they're in other stores as well. The label reads Zole. The designer is Zoran Ladicorbic, Yugoslav, and this is his first collection.

Going back to the women, Bonwit Teller (EL 5-6800) is casting its votes for Diane Von Furstenberg, the astonishing young designer who has become a coast-to-coast favorite in just a few years. Her wrap-around dress, which has practically cornered the market in one-piece dresses, will be available in new prints and colors as will her tunics and pants.

Figuring that women who wear her clothes would like to meet the designer, Bonwit's has invited her to show her clothes and offer advice on Monday and Tuesday from noon to 4 P.M. The store is also offering a place to rest one's feet in its delegates hospitality lounge on the sixth floor.

Saks Fifth Avenue (PL 3-4000) is focusing activities on its delegates lounge on the sixth floor, where instant charge accounts can be opened by the 8,100 delegates and their wives. Refreshments will be offered at tables with red, white and blue cloths.

Visitors can either tour the store or have merchandise brought to them by saleswomen wearing shirts printed with the 50 state seals. The shirts will be for sale for $28. Tote bags printed with the signatures on the Declaration of Independence ($11), patchwork jackets suggesting old Americana ($160), a scarf by Dior representing the Paris couture house's Bicentennial salute ($46) and men's ties depicting soldiers, donkeys or flags ($7.50 to $15) are some of the things that can be ordered without getting up from the checkered table.

Lord & Taylor (WI 7-3300) is making it possible for delegates to decide what they want without leaving their hotel room. It has made a 20-minute videotape of merchandise available throughout the store that will be played on Channel 6, the in-house television channel of major hotels.

John Weitz will present the men's clothes, Bill Blass the bath and bedroom furnishings and Nancy Dussault, the actress, will present the sports clothes, children's wear, gifts and cooking utensils. Robert Janan dresses and Geoffrey Beene sportswear are among the fashions highlighted.

In addition to being shown twice each morning between 8 A.M. and 9 A.M., the video tapes will be repeated in the store's third floor delegates lounge where personal shoppers will fetch the goods. You don't have to be a delegate to partake.

Solid Fashion Goods

Besides bargain tables, Ohrbach's (OX 5-4000) offers a wide selection of solid fashion merchandise, from fisherman's knit sweaters for boys ($11.99) to Uruguayan leather jackets for women ($55).

This is the place to pick up a cashmere coat for $110, an evening dress with handkerchief points for $37.99 or a blazer in indigo blue denim, stitched in green with green lining, at $57. The denim jacket is part of a coordinated grouping that includes straight-leg pants, vest, skirt and madras shirt and is an example of the typically American sportswear look.

The first steps in the fall fashion plan at Altman's (689-7000) are an emphasis on soft-knit dressing, represented in styles from Milan, Paris and London as well as New York, and on all varieties of coats. This includes quilted, knitted, blanket and fur-lined styles.

Informal modeling on the third floor will make it possible for customers to consider what the store thinks is new in these areas before trying it on themselves.

Among the styles being featured: a hooded, knitted poncho, striped and with fringed edges ($99) worn with tweedy looking knickers ($49). These are by Adrienne, another woman designer, for those who are keeping track.

Altman's convention center is on the eighth floor, with telephones checkroom and delivery service to hotels available.

Macy's (971-6000), the mammoth store, offers acres of handbags and blouses on its main floor and lingerie on its second floor along with its hospitality center.

Its Little Shop o floor offers styles strong American de Oscar de la Rent Anne Klein, Calvin Bill Blass for Bla Expressions shop avant-garde, wi Cathy Hardwick Horn clothes.

Exotica: Specialties for the Rarest Tastes

By LAWRENCE VAN GELDER

If you live in the sort of community where no special effort is required on any given day to come up with an Indian sari, a photograph of James Cagney pushing a grapefruit in Mae Clark's face, a wine press, a century-old Navajo rug, a copy of The Jerusalem Post, next week's best-selling novel at half price, a bottle of rare claret, a kosher pickle out of a barrel, a campaign hat, a T-shirt decorated with Mickey and Minnie Mouse exchanging compliments in Japanese, a ship's wheel, a wallet for darts, a ceremonial rattle, a 20-inch piece of wooden type, the cologne reputedly used by George Washington, a pinch of Rupture Wort, a pound of caviar and a snack of Scotch salmon, then don't bother to read the rest of this.

You're already a New Yorker or a resident of one of a dozen or so of the world's great cities.

One of the distinguishing features of New York and other great cities is a myriad of stores catering to a myriad of interests and tastes—from the conoisseur of the grape to the Mickey Mouse maven. (And for those who have never before encountered the word maven well, that's part of the pleasure of the city too. New York is a polyglot community, and Yiddish is one of its languages. Which is why, if you're a city maven, you'll love New York.)

Anyway, whatever your interest, someone in New York is likely to serve it, from "A" as in artists' supplies, to "Z" as in Zabar's, the Rolls-Royce of delicatessens, which is a Saturday night scene and a removable feast.

So let's take a quick trip around town, understanding that what follows is by no means inclusive and that some of the best discoveries of off-beat places are the ones you'll make while headed to or from somewhere else.

Remember, too, that unusual shops sometimes keep unusual hours, so it's best to call in advance and make sure you'll be there when the shop is open.

Artists Supplies

Artist's supplies? Try the New York Central Supply Company at 62 Third Avenue, near 11th Street (GR 3-7705), which caters to the needs of painters, printmakers, calligraphers and their kin with everything from handmade paper, oblique pen holders, ornate sketchbooks and tote bags to all sorts of conventional equipment.

To be in this neighborhood is to be within easy hiking distance of several other of the city's more interesting stores The Kiehl Pharmacy, at 109 Third Avenue, near 13th Street (475-3400) is one of the city's oldest. It's one of the places where you can find Rupture Wort and other herbs: an extensive array of essences; natural creams, lotions and shampoos and an assortment of honeys from Scottish heather to Greek Hymettus.

Just to the south, at 105 Third Avenue, is Hudson's (GR 5-9568), a cornucopia of camping gear, surplus, work clothes and fashion that is one of the city's more fascinating army-navy stores, along with Kaufman's Surplus (319 West 42d Street, PL 7-5670) and Richard's (233 West 42d Street, 947-5018) which also regards itself as a specialist in catering to the needs of scuba divers.

Serious outdoorsmen will not want to overlook either Kreeger & Sons (30 West 46th Street, 541-9704) or Abercrombie & Fitch, on Madison Avenue and 45th Street (682-3600).

The nearby streets are a magnet for the city's stylishly conservative men. In this neighborhood are the main store of the renowned Brooks Brothers (Madison Avenue and 44th Street; 682-8800); Paul Stuart, (Madison and 45th Street; MU 2-0320); J. Press (16 East 44th Street; MU 7-7642); Chipp, 14 East 44th Street (687-0850), and F.R. Tripler, at Madison Avenue and 46th Street (MU 2-1760). Farther away, but not to be overlooked by anyone seriously interested in men's clothing and furnishings, is Dunhill Tailors, at 65 East 57th Street (EL 5-0050).

But clothes — surplus or custom made—may not be your interest. What about wines? Try Sherry-Lehmann at 679 Madison (TE 8-7500) between 61st and 62d Streets. Sporting goods? Hermans, with branches at 110 Nassau Street (233-0733) or 135 West 42d (730-7400); or Paragon, at 867 Broadway (255-8036) corner of 18th Street. Serious players of racquet games will want to look toward Feron's, at 55 East 44th Street (MU 9-4539). Hockey buffs will seek out Cosby's at 3 Pennsylvania Plaza in the Madison Square Garden complex (563-6464). And dartists won't want to miss Darts Unlimited at 30 East 20th Street (533-8684).

Exotic soaps, shaving creams, imported snuff and that after-shave reputedly beloved of George Washington? Caswell-Massey, at 518 Lexington Avenue, at 48th Street (PL 5-2254). The Indian sari? Sona of India, 11 East 55th Street (752-4586). The photo of James Cagney and the grapefruit? Movie Star News, 212 East 14th Street (982-8363); and, for more wares of interest to film buffs, Cinemabilia, at 10 West 13th Street (989-8519).

If you're left handed, consider The Left Hand, a store for southpaws at 140 West 22d Street (675-6265), where you can pick up such items as scissors for left-handers. Crazy about Disney characters? Try Old Friends for all sorts of new and old memorabilia, 202 East 31st Street 686-4291). Best sellers of the future at half-price today? These and other books, by the thousands, may be found at the Strand Book Store, 828 Broadway, at 12th Street (GR 3-1452). A wine press, and just about everything else needed for home wine-making? Milan Laboratory, at 57 Spring Street, west of Mulberry (CA 6-4780). Decorative wooden type? Stonehand, at 246 Centre Street (966-3325). The Jerusalem Post and other Israeli newspapers, as well as books on Judaica? S. Rabinowitz Hebrew Book Store, at 30 Canal Street, near Essex (CO 7-2406). If you're in this neighborhood, the kosher pickles are a block away, at the venerable Guss stand at 42 Hester (GR 7-1969), and the new Pickleman, at 27 Essex, near Hester (533-8448), run by Lou Lichter, who used to oversee the Guss Operation.

For the ship's wheel and other nautical artifacts, try P.J. McNally at 144 Chambers Street (962-4547) and some of the shops in the South Street Seaport complex between Water and South Streets on Fulton Street (766-9020). Indian rugs, ceremonial rattles and the like come out of the shops of the city's various museums, which are a fine source of unusual and often inexpensive gifts.

If you want to limit yourself geographically, there is little to rival the stretch of Fifth Avenue from, say, 34th Street to 59th Street, or Madison Avenue from 42d Street into the 80's. Not only is Fifth Avenue the home of some of the city great department stores, it is also—like Madison Avenue—the site of some of its most elegant shops. Here is where you find Cartier and Tiffany, and F. A. O. Schwarz, which is to toys what Cartier and Tiffany are to jewels. Fifth Avenue is home, too, to a hive of bookstores: Scribner's, Brentano, Doubleday and the beauteous Rizzoli. The name Rizzoli is a reflection of the Italianization of Fifth Avenue, a trend that has brought to the famed thoroughfare some of Italy's most illustrious retailing names: Gucci, with three stores between 54th and 55th Streets; Roberta di Camerino at 51st Street; Valentino and Carrano, between 53d and 54th Streets; Richard Ginori, at 56th Street; Ferragamo, also at 56th Street, just behind Steuben glass; Buccellati, a neighbor of Gucci, and, on the 61st Street side of the Hotel Pierre, Bulgari.

Along Madison Avenue, those who smoke will not want to overlook Peterson's Ltd., between 43d and 44th Streets; the Wally Frank store across the way; and the renowned Wilke Pipe Shop at 400 Madison, between 47th and 48th Streets. Upper Madison Avenue, in the 60's, 70's and 80's, offers a plethora of art galleries; Miss Grimble's Bakery, at 79th Street; the Sotheby Parke Bernet auction rooms at 76th Street; fFolio 72, at 888 Madison between 71st and 72d Streets, for innovative ideas in writing paper; the self-descriptive Lady Madonna Maternity Boutique at 793 Madison, near 67th Street; the equally self-explanatory Caviarteria at 870, near 71st Street and the out-of-the ordinary dresses at the Rubicon Boutique, at 849, near 70th Street. Its worth repeating that this list is by no means exclusive or exclusionary. A walk along here is the kind that leads to all sorts of discoveries.

Which brings us to Z for Zabar's, at 2245 Broadway, between 80th and 81st Street, where lovers of herring, smoked salmon, caviar, cheeses, French breads, bagels, and exotic varieties of sausage gather to glean on weekends in what is surely the archetypal West Side scene. Life at Zabar's is quieter at other times, but nonetheless interesting to those who like to eat well (787-2000).

Consumer Tips For Visitors

By ARI GOLDMAN

Most visitors know enough to shun a man who offers to sell the Brooklyn Bridge for $5, but what about a transistor radio for $3, a "genuine" jade necklace for $30 or tickets to "A Chorus Line" for $50?

The city's Department of Consumer Affairs wants to make sure that a bad shopping experience doesn't spoil a visit to the convention city. Its prescription for avoiding such a problem is one word: Ask.

Ask for a sales receipt, ask for the list price, ask about the return policy, ask for the posted rates, ask about the guarantee, ask for the vendor's license.

And, if your questions aren't satisfactorily answered, call the department's consumer complaint number at any time: 964-7777.

The Consumer Affairs Department together with the New York City Bicentennial Corporation have prepared a booklet, called "Welcome Visiting Consumer," which contains hints about theater-ticket brokers, horse-drawn cabs, parking, shopping and complaint procedures.

Just in case something does go wrong, though, the host committee has set up a special number that the delegates can call at any time for help: 399-3020.

Some of the department's suggestions follow:

To get a sense of the physical city, begin with the big picture. Observatories have sprouted atop skyscrapers in many cities in recent years, but New York's tradition of elevated viewing goes back to the erection of a 300-foot tower called the Latting Observatory in 1853, and this is still the city in which views are taken seriously. There are four public observatories today, and each provides a different way of looking at the city.

The Empire State Building, at Fifth Avenue and 34th Street, is right in the center of town, and the view is richly varied in all directions: north to midtown and Central Park (and upstate on a clear day), west to the garment center and the Hudson River, south to the financial district, and east to Murray Hill and Queens.

From the Empire State you are high enough to perceive the city as a totality, yet enough in the middle of things to feel the pulse of the streetscape. Go on a clear night if you can; the lights of the city are one of the few man-made sights anywhere that can bring on the sort of stunned hush most people reserve for places like the Grand Canyon.

The Empire State Building observatory is open every day from 9:30 to midnight. Admission is $1.70 for adults, 85 cents for children under 12.

Like a Plane in Midair

From the 107th floor of the World Trade Center, New York is a different experience altogether. In a sense it is like viewing the city from a plane frozen in midair; looking north, midtown Manhattan rises in the distance, and becomes visible as a unit.

The view alters dramatically to the east, however, as you look toward the trade center's immediate neighborhood of Lower Manhattan. Now, you are looking not at a distant city, but almost directly down at a cluster of skyscrapers a block or two away. The angle is sharp, and you can stare down at the fanciful tops of such skyscrapers as the Woolworth Building of 1913 and 70 Pine Street and 40 Wall Street of early 1930's.

The greatest thrill, however, is the trade center's roof—it is the only place in New York from which you can see an uninterrupted 360-degree view, and the only place in which your own eyes will be able to perceive the shape and entirety of this island city.

The observation deck and roof are in the southern of the trade center's twin 110-story towers, and are open from 9:30 A.M. to 9:30 P.M. every day. Admission is the same as at the Empire State Building: $1.70 for adults, 85 cents for children.

RCA Building

From the 70th floor of the RCA Building at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, Rockefeller Center, the city is more immediate, more graspable, yet less complete; you are thrust into the midst of midtown Manhattan, close enough to create the illusion that you can reach out and touch the tops of nearby skyscrapers. One of them is that fine building top that no one has ever managed to see from the Empire State Building—that of the Empire State itself.

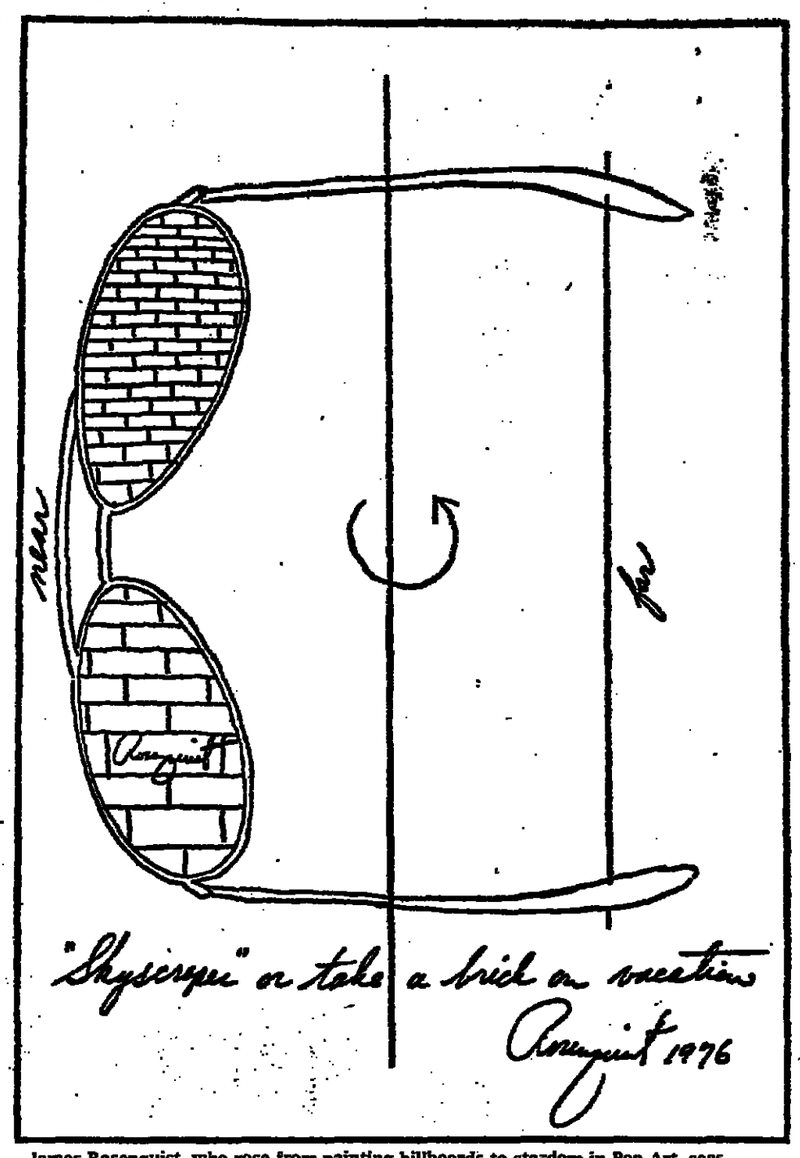
The RCA Building observatory is open from 10 to 9 every day. Admission is $1.50 for adults, 85 cents for children.

Little known even to native New Yorkers is the Williamsburg Savings Bank's tower observatory at 1 Hanson Place, Brooklyn. The Williamsburg's 28-story tower was built in the 20's in a loosely Romanesque style, and its pinnacle offers an expansive view not only of Brooklyn, but of lower Manhattan and the New York Harbor. It is open from 10 to 3, Monday through Saturday, and admission is free.

If the city is best initially perceived from aloft, its details reveal themselves only on close inspection. For all of this city's preoccupation with newness, it has never quite taken to the automobile, and the way to understand New York best is to walk in it. The city's buildings—most of them, at least—are scaled to the pedestrian, intended to be seen by strollers rather than by motorists.

The Idea of the Street

Indeed, the very idea of the street is as crucial to New York's architecture as the idea of the tower. In a city, the whole is more than the sum of its parts, and on the city's best streets, such as Madison Avenue above 57th Street or Fifth Avenue in midtown, individual buildings defer to the overall environment. On upper Madison—which is arguably the pleasantest pedestrian street in the world—there is just enough variety in the boutique and gallery windows and in the brownstones and apartment houses above them to create visual interest, yet enough continuity to pull the entire place together.



James Rosenquist, who rose from painting billboards to stardom in Pop Art, sees himself as "a brick in one of New York's skyscrapers, a little part of the great scene." In his studio on Broome Street, he worked for six years "and never got away," and he says the idea of taking a brick on vacation applies to him.

What makes Madison work is not the easy unity of a lot of identical buildings, but the much more subtle unity of varied, lively places working in harmony. And Fifth Avenue is almost as good: An ideal, if long, walk would be from the Empire State Building at 34th Street, up past Altman's (the most imposing of New York's department store buildings), Lord & Taylor, and the great Beaux-Arts mass of the Public Library at 42d Street, then on to Rockefeller Center between 48th and 51st Streets.

Rockefeller Center, now more than 40 years old, was the model for all the postwar multi-skyscraper groupings in cities around the world, but its quality has never been surpassed. The taut composition of buildings, the sense of 1930's elegance combined with 1970's street life, all make Rockefeller Center a source of continued joy to New Yorkers.

Fifth Avenue is a spate of fancy new Italian shops farther uptown; one is in Olympic Tower, the combination retail-office-apartment complex at Fifth and 51st that is intended to lead the way for continued mixed-use construction. And at 59th Street, just short of Central Park, stands the Hotel Plaza—the 1907 French Renaissance fantasy wildly beloved by New Yorkers, and yet serious enough as a piece of architecture to have earned the admiration of Frank Lloyd Wright, who lived there for many years.

Central Park itself, from 59th Street to 110th Street, is one of the most famous parks in the world, and it is important for reasons that go well beyond its role as a green oasis in a concrete city. The design of the park in the mid-19th century by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux, with its enormous variety of different landscape experiences and circulation systems intricately worked into 840 acres, is a model for urban park designs all over the world. At 72d Street in the middle of the park, the elegant and formal Bethesda Fountain is viewed against a different and totally rustic landscape; the contrast is typical of park experiences.

The park is lined with expensive apartment houses jostling for valuable frontage; the confrontation between the green acreage and the masonry towers is dramatic and oddly beautiful. Be certain, if you are in the neighborhood east of the park along Fifth Avenue, to wander in and around the elegant blocks of town houses between Fifth and Lexington in the 60's and 70's; they will remind you that New York is not all glass boxes or Times Square sleaze.

Cast Iron in SoHo

There are some urban experiences that are uniquely New York's; one is a walk through the rich stock of 19th-century cast-iron structures filling SoHo, the neighborhood south of Houston Street. The cast-iron method of construction was an early form of prefabrication, but instead of stamping out identical dull boxes, the cast-iron architects made palaces with facades full of ornate Italianate detailing. Once industrial buildings, the cast-iron structures now house new life as art galleries and studios.

The East 42d Street area contains a group of structures that, individually or together, could also exist nowhere but in New York. The United Nations complex on the East River, designed by an international consortium of architects in the late 1940's, was the city's first glass curtain-wall structure, and it is now a splendid period piece of early modern design. A new version of the glass wall has just gone up across the street at 1 United Nations Plaza, the hotel and office complex by Kevin Roche, a building of stunning elegance in its exterior design and unusual shape.

Just around the corner at 320 East 43d Street is Mr. Roche's Ford Foundation, whose 10-story garden atrium continues to evoke a mild gasp even in an age used to John Portman's vast hotel courts. And down 42d Street at the corner of Lexington Avenue is the Chrysler Building, William Van Alen's exuberant fantasy spire of the 1930's, but a building as notable for its fine period lobby as for its top.

Just down the block from Chrysler is Grand Central Terminal, itself a virtual symbol of the city. The Beaux-Arts facade was designed in 1913 by Warren & Wetmore, with the overall terminal design by Reed & Stem; the mammoth interior concourse has all the power and sense of adventure a great train station is supposed to offer, and if the 20th Century Limited is no longer leaving from a red-carpeted platform, the recent cleaning of the great interior space, which now looks stunning, makes up for it.

New York is, of course, a water city, and the fact that most New Yorkers tend to ignore this does not make it any less so. Boat rides on the Circle Line (563-3200) circumnavigate the island of Manhattan in three hours, leaving from the foot of West 43d Street; shorter and almost as much fun is the city government's own famous boat ride, the Staten Island ferry. Both trips offer a lively look at the harbor and the incomparable drama of the view of the towers of Lower Manhattan appearing to soar out of the water.

Bridges for Walking

If it is fun to sail in New York's waterways, it is perhaps best of all to walk over them. The Brooklyn Bridge, downtown at the east end of Chambers Street, is, like Central Park, not a building but one of the city's truly great works of architecture nonetheless, and the best way to see it is to stroll across its free pedestrian walkway. From there you will have a fine view of the weblike pattern of the cables of the 93-year-old bridge, not to mention the fine harbor and skyline view.

A little less accessible, but just as exciting, is a walk across the George Washington Bridge, at 179th Street in Washington Heights, whose exposed steel towers are the 20th century's answer to the Gothic structure of the Brooklyn.

Perhaps the ultimate way to see New York from above the river, though, is something so new that New Yorkers themselves are only beginning to explore it: the Swiss-built aerial tramway across the East River to Roosevelt Island. The tram leaves from a station at Second Avenue and 59th Street, and it provides a joyous four-minute ride up over skyline, highway and river, part Disneyland, part Swiss Alps, and all for the price of a subway token.

"It's very unusual," she said. "It's the only place I know of where they give you a bottle of seltzer and chicken fat at your table. You can also get unborn eggs there."

Tom Seaver, the pitcher for the New York Mets, and his wife, Nancy, both urged the delegates to go to a Broadway show during the convention. Two that they recommend highly are "The Magic Show" and "The Wiz."

"We're both from California," Mrs. Seaver said, "and even on the West Coast you have to go all the way to San Francisco to see theater of any consequence. One of my big fears is that the theater may not survive, and that's why I wish that everyone could go as often as possible."

Billy Wilson, who choreographed one hit show on Broadway, "Bubbling Brown Sugar," and directed another musical that begins previews tomorrow, a black version of "Guys and Dolls," suggested that the delegates take a trip to 125th Street in Harlem.

"There is a marvelous market all across 125th Street, from one end to another," he said. "You can buy a lot of African jewelry, and a lot of soul food. And the wigs—they go on for days. It's very colorful and I always enjoy it."

Besides the boating trip at City Island, Mayor Beame also recommended fishing in Sheepshead Bay and a visit to the Aquarium, both in Brooklyn, a "trip into history" at the Richmondtown restoration in Staten Island, and a visit to the Hall of Science museum in Flushing Meadow, Queens.

Donna Shalala, who is treasurer of the Municipal Assistance Corporation, advised delegates to eat at the Oyster Bar in Grand Central Station "because it's like eating in a castle. The food's good, and it's very noisy, and you can see all of New York in it, because there are all kinds of people there."

Donald J. Trump, one of the city's biggest realtors, suggested that the visitors "sit back and look at the skyline of New York, because it's really the most magnificent skyline in the world. It's fantastic!"

He said he thought that the best views of the skyline could be seen from Brooklyn near the Brooklyn Bridge, or from a cruise around Manhattan Island on a Circle Line boat.

Harry Reams, the pornographic film star who was recently convicted in Memphis of conspiracy to transport interstate obscene materials, recommended a visit to the China Fair, an arcade at 6 Mott Street in Chinatown that features The Dancing Chicken and The Imperial Dragon.

"You put a quarter in a machine and a real live chicken comes out and dances," he said. "Then he pulls a string and releases some food and eats it, and then goes back in his box. You put a quarter in another machine and a papier-mâché dragon begins to rear his head up, and his red eyes light up, and smoke comes out of his nostrils."

Representative Bella Abzug suggested that the delegates visit Ellis Island, "the gateway for millions of people to this country. And I think they should visit the Lower East Side, where many famous people grew up, and where they still have some great eating places."

Three of the city's best-known women—Bess Myerson, Betty Friedan and Marion Javits—all recommended that the delegates take walks around New York as the best way of getting to know the city and its people.

"I think they should go to Times Square, where you can still see the circus of life, the human acrobatics," Miss Myerson said. "And where else can you see a sign that's a block long?"

To Miss Friedan, "the nicest thing about New York is simply its streets. I'd tell the delegates to walk in the streets, walk in Greenwich Village, walk on the West Side. The whole life of New York is the streets, the people and the music."

Marion Javits, wife of the senior Senator from New York, suggested "lovely long walks along Fifth Avenue from 58th to 34th Streets, and then back up along Madison Avenue to see all the lovely shops and people and restaurants.

"Then I'd tell them to walk along Sutton Place and Beekman Place to see the East River. It's a part of New York City that's unscathed, where people just sit on benches and enjoy the city."

As Robert F. Wagner Jr., a Manhattan City Councilman-at-Large sees it, the delegates should visit "some of the more desolate parts of New York, such as the South Bronx."

"The South Bronx made a tremendous impression on Jerry Brown when he was here," Mr. Wagner said. "Maybe it would help the visitors get a sense of some of the problems we have, and vote for aid to New York City."

Joan Hackett, the actress, who was born at 120th Street and First Avenue, recommended a visit to the Egyptian Gardens, a belly dancing establishment at 301 West 29th Street, and bowling at the bowling alley in Madison Square Garden, "which is a hoot," she said, "if you bring some of those intellectually oriented people along. They're so incompetent."

Halston, the fashion designer, suggested the delegates munch on a hot dog ("They're the best ever") in Paley Park, the tranquil vest pocket park, complete with waterfall, just off bustling Fifth Avenue at 3 East 53rd Street.

"I would also advise the delegates to see the fabulous show at the Costume Institute at the Metropolitan Museum of Art," Halston added. "It's called 'Great American Ladies,' by Diana Vreeland. And at the Museum of Modern Art there is the taxi show, all about taxis of the future. It's a great show for civic minded people."

To Bobby Short, the entertainer, the "No. 1 place in New York" is the Windows on the World restaurant on the 107th floor of the World Trade Center.

"I've just come from eating there," he said, "and the view is spectacular! For a large restaurant, it's run extremely well, and the food is marvelous, and the people are nice, and it's all extremely spic and span. The only thing that comes close to it anywhere in the world is the Eiffel Tower."

Ethel Scull, the socialite and Pop art collector, suggested the delegates visit SoHo, the artists' community south of Houston Street in lower Manhattan.

"I'd wish they'd wander along West Broadway, and stop in at the galleries and see the younger artists who are appearing there. They should also go into the Spring Street bar and have lunch. There are always a lot of artists around there."

Pearl Wong, hostess at the popular Pearl's Restaurant, at 38 West 48th Street, recommended that the visitors go to the racetrack ("My favorite is Monmouth Park") or to Yankee Stadium to see her beloved New York Yankees play.

"I'm a rabid Yankee fan," she said, "and I think they're doing well since they got Catfish Hunter last year. The players are finally pulling themselves together."

A Guide To the City's Melting Pot

By RICHARD F. SHEPARD

New York, as a place of many tongues and of diverse customs, is carrying on a tradition that began when the first settlers, a polyglot assortment of Walloons and Flemings, came ashore and were the bulk of the Dutch town's original population.

New York is the ultimate mammoth cliché of American immigration: Newcomers becoming old-stock, new waves displacing old waves. The Dutch, the English, the Germans, the Irish, the Italians, the Jews, the blacks, the Puerto Ricans, the South Americans and the West Indians.

The city's ethnicity, like archeological strata, is there for the curious eye to uncover. It is no longer—except for rare cases or on holidays — costumed and quaint in New York and often it is not easy to tell where one neighborhood starts and another ends. But it is a tangible presence, in stores, restaurants, nightclubs and on the newsstands that proclaim in foreign languages the customers they serve.

In most areas the main language is English, the main enthusiasms are those that they share with their fellow New Yorkers. But there are swatches of varying size, of Jewish Queens, of Irish Manhattan, of West Indian Brooklyn, of Albanian Bronx, and in many neighborhoods, the flavor of the melting pot's original ingredients remains.

Spreading Cultures

Sometimes, a glimpse of a transplanted culture can be had in one block; in others, it spreads over large neighborhoods. On Amsterdam Avenue, for instance, north of 79th Street, Haitians and Dominicans, neighbors in the Caribbean, have their presence reflected in storefronts and neighborhood community centers.

A walk through 47th Street, between Fifth Avenue and Avenue of the Americas takes the stroller through the largely Jewish diamond center. The second language is Yiddish and the little restaurants tucked away upstairs or in back of the several large diamond exchanges on the block specialize in kosher cooking. The street is crowded with Hasidim and other Orthodox Jews who come to work and go home in their own buses. On Saturday, it is a very quiet street.

A short trip to Atlantic Avenue, across the East River near Brooklyn Heights puts the visitor in the Middle East. Many of the people there are Lebanese, although there are numerous other Arabs in the neighborhood. The restaurants serve Arab delicacies, the newstands carry Arabic newspapers and the music you hear from the record store was writteen, probably, east of Suez.

One of the largest Greek settlements in New York is in Queens, in Astoria, which is not far from the East River. On Steinway Street, one of its main stems, the signs are often in Greek and the language in the streets is often Greek.

Astoria is just across the East River from Manhattan and the RR train on the Astoria line, to the last stop, will get you there. Once there you can take your choice of a number of night spots to visit (at night, of course), with Greek dancing, music and drings luring you away from it all. Among them: Scorpios (721-1209), 31-11 Broadway, Astoria; Stani (728-9782), 29-21 23d Avenue; and Tsolias Tavern (274-9769), Astoria Boulevard and 21st Street.

There are many Greek nightclubs in Manhattan. The dean of them all is the Port Said, 257 West 29th Street (244-9322), a lively place with a jolly Hollywood casting office roster of personalities, customers and performers. A little more elegant is Dionysos, 304 East 48th Street (758-8240).

A Flamboyant Strip

In Manhattan, East 86th Street, between Second and Third Avenues is a noisy, somewhat flamboyant strip with bars and night clubs. It is also the main street of Yorkville, the once-heavily German neighborhood of New York. The konditoreien, or pastry shops, serve coffee mit schlag (whipped cream) and edibles with more of the same. In restaurants or bars you can enjoy sauerbraten, beer, schnitzel Holstein or pigs' knuckles.

A walk southward on Second Avenue from 86th Street takes the flâneur from a little Germany to a little Hungary. In the lower 80's, there is a Hungarian cafeteria, a famous Hungarian store — Paprikas Weiss, at No. 1246, with imported utensils and edibles—and Hungarian restaurants.

South of the Hungarians is a slice of Czechoslovakia, toward 72d Street, with stores and a few restaurants.

Ethnicity permeates New York in strange ways. On 46th Street, from Fifth to Seventh Avenues, with overflows on West 45th Street, many signs are in Portuguese, and the stores, mostly on the second floor, are decorated in the green and gold Brazilian colors. There are three or four Brazilian restaurants in the area, and the stores sell all sorts of American-made goods — hair-dryers, clothes, radios, TV's. Yet there are few if any Brazilians living here (nor many in the metropolitan region, certainly not enough to constitute a neighborhood), and the Brazilian presence is designed to serve tourists from Latin America, or to feed New Yorkers with a passion for feijoada and shrimp Bahiana.

A "Foreign" Neighborhood

The most self-consciously "foreign" neighborhood in New York is Chinatown, on the Bowery, below Canal Street, where the atmosphere is preserved to attract the big-time spending of tourists. The narrow streets, which were there before the Chinese, add to the excitement of visiting a strange place. Restaurants are next to each other, sometimes on top of each other, and you have the choice of all regions of Chinese cooking.

Just north of Canal Street, along Mulberry and Mott Streets, reaching a crescendo along Grand and Hester Streets, is Little Italy, where only a tiny but tenacious minority of the city's Italian Americans cling to one of their original settlements. Pastry shops, restaurants, Italian record stores and clubhouses in front of which neighborhood men sit and contemplate the world about leave no doubt of the neighborhood's make-up.

There are a number of nightclubs offering Middle Eastern-Jewish-Israeli entertainment. One of the more jumping is the Cafe Feenjon, 117 Macdougal Street in Greenwich Village, on the corner of Minetta Street, between Third and Bleecker Streets. Decor is rough-cut, but the four-piece band is loud and thumping: accordionist from Israel, a hot drummer who is a Moroccan Arab, a Greek guitarist and, on the oud, the boss of the place, Menachem Dworman, who was born in Israel but came here at an early age. Shows start at 9 (Sundays at 8).

The show is always on in the evenings at El Avram, 80 Grove Street, at Sheridan Square, also in the Village. It's not sophisticated but it is fun, the sort of place you can take the family to, have a meal and/or drinks. The action moves around the floor and customers often join in.

It is not lavish nor is it touristy, but the part of New York that centers on East 116th Street, particularly around Park Avenue, is a Puerto Rican bastion. Little shops sell ices and Puerto Rican delicacies. The chatter of Spanish in the market below the elevated railroad tracks on Park Avenue is animated, and the shopping here will impart the tang of a trip to the Caribbean.

Hispanic New Yorkers usually go out in fairly formal style, so try to wear a shirt and bring along a tie for emergencies. You can dance at El Chico, 1800 Second Avenue, at 93d Street, which caters to younger Puerto Ricans. Or you may prefer the more starchy elegance of the Chateau Madrid, at Lexington Avenue and 48th Street; a favorite spot here for about-towners is the Flamenco Suite, a small room that resounds to the clicking heels and plucked guitars that work only in flamenco. The bigger Alameda Room generally features a full-scale revue.

In Queens, at Main Street in Flushing, where the IRT Flushing Line ends, the large ideographs attest to stores catering to the Japanese residents of the borough, said to be their largest concentration in the city. Also on this scene are many Indians, including turbaned Sikhs, and there are restaurants that specialize in curries as well as those that major in sushi.

New Yorkers are no longer as "foreign" as they once were and even the new immigrants arrive with a certain sophistication about big-city ways and dress that their precursors did not have. Those whose grandparents came to New York frequently look down on the "greenhorns," the newcomers, who may be out-of-town blacks or newly arrived Sicilians or recently landed Chinese. It is not always a case of one ethnic group disapproving of another, although this happens, but it is often a matter of a more established part of an ethnic group feeling superior to latecomers.

Yet, all New Yorkers seem to take the St. Patrick's Day parade, the Norwegian Day parade, the Steuben parade, the Puerto Rican parade, the Israel parade, the Columbus Day parade, the West Indian parade, the Greek Independence Day parade in stride. We are all on the march, not in step, but vaguely toward a mutual fate.

Many Splendors Await Visitors to Outer Areas

By MURRAY SCHUMACH

One of the first things delegates to the Democratic National Convention and their families should understand about New York City is that of its more than 7.7 million residents, nearly 6.2 million live in Brooklyn, Queens, the Bronx and Staten Island. Of the remaining 1.4 million only a very small percentage lives in Times Square or along Fifth Avenue, or other areas most frequented by tourists.

Those who venture into what are sometimes called the "outer boroughs," will be sightseeing contrary to the expectations of the Democratic National Committee, which told the city's Citizen Committee for the Democratic National Convention that delegates would not be interested in straying far from Madison Square Garden.

But the curious will find trips to the other boroughs very worthwhile.

For instance, one of the most magnificent skyline views of Manhattan is to be seen from the Flushing subway line, in Queens, as it makes a graceful, tilted turn before submerging into a tunnel under the East River. The best time is about sunset, when the Manhattan skyscrapers are set against an orange haze.

The BMT subway line to Astoria—it can be picked up in Times Square—leads to what is believed to be the largest Greek community outside Athens (the vicinity of the Ditmas Boulevard station).

And now that the horses are running again at Aqueduct, in Queens, a subway special leaves from Eighth Avenue at 42d Street, direct to the home of the thoroughbreds.

Brooklyn has many attractions. Those who want to stroll along the beautiful Promenade in Brooklyn Heights, with a lovely view of the harbor and Manhattan skyline, can get there quickly by taking the Broadway-Seventh Avenue subway beneath Madison Square Garden and getting off at either Clark Street or Borough Hall, Brooklyn.

The same line, taken a little further goes to the superb Brooklyn Botanical Gardens and the Brooklyn Museum (Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn Museum station).

Coney Island and the Aquarium can be reached on the BMT's Coney Island branch, which can be taken at Times Square or Herald Square, both an easy walk from the convention site.

The Bronx has two world-famous tourist attractions—Yankee Stadium, home of the baseball Yankees (who play the Chicago White Sox there today, tomorrow and Sunday), and the Bronx Zoo. The former can be reached by either the Concourse branch of the Independent line or the Woodlawn-Jerome Avenue branch of the Lexington Avenue line. The Independent has a stop at Madison Square Garden and the Lexington can be taken at Grand Central.

The Bronx Zoo can be reached by either the Lexington Avenue (No. 5), or the Seventh Avenue (No. 2) to the East-Tremont Avenue station.

Many visitors to New York have visited its famous Little Italy in downtown Manhattan. But not many New Yorkers—let alone visitors —have been to the Italian quarter in the Belmont section of the Bronx. Its main street, Arthur Avenue, was featured in Mario Puzo's "The Godfather," and in the movie. To get there take either the Lexington (No. 5) or the Seventh Avenue (No. 2) to 149th Street and Third Avenue and then get a free transfer to the Bronx-55 bus. Get off at 184th Street and a short walk east to Arthur Avenue.

The subway does not run to Staten Island. But the ferry to Staten Island (round trip, 25 cents) is one of the great tourist buys of the world and so wonderful that even New Yorkers continue to ride it for fun. Take the Seventh Avenue local—beneath Madison Square Garden—to South Ferry and walk the short distance to the ferry. A wonderful way to say goodbye to the city, with a view of the Statue of Liberty and Manhattan skyline.

For those who choose to go by cab, starting from Madison Square Garden, a group of owner-operators of Yellow medallion cabs quote the following fares: Shea Stadium, $9; Astoria, $5; Brooklyn Heights, $10; Brooklyn Botanical Gardens and Museum, $8; The Aquarium Coney Island, $15; Bedford-Stuyvesant, $6; Yankee Stadium, $7; Bronx Zoo, $9, and Arthur Avenue, $9.

Harlem: Where to Go And What to See

By C. GERALD FRASER

Old-timers used to say: "I would rather be a lamppost in Harlem than the mayor of Waycross, Ga." But the young poet-playwright Ntozake Shange has called the Harlem she knew "six blocks of cruelty." A young Harlem resident added: "In New York, you either eat well, dress well or live well; but you don't do all three." In seven decades, Harlem has become the nation's and New York's legendary black community.

There are other black communities in New York City. Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant is a black melting pot of former Southerners, former Harlemites, West Indians and Haitians. In Queens, the better-off-than-average bed down in St. Albans and Springfield Gardens. Concentrations of blacks in communities in the Bronx have combined with the borough's Puerto Rican population to make it the city's first borough with a majority black and Puerto Rican population. And on Staten Island—the south end of the ferry ride—is historic Sandy Ground, where blacks began settling in 1640.

There are other notable black communities in the nation. Southwest Atlanta, Southern hub of black education; Southside Chicago, with its businesses, money and politics; East and West Detroit, built on sweat from automobile assembly lines, and South Central Los Angeles for Southerners who wanted to stay in the sun.

Largest Black Population

But there are more black people in New York City than in any other city in the United States. When the world thinks about blacks in America, thoughts often turn to Harlem. And when blacks think about Harlem, they think about "home." Harlem is theirs.

To know Harlem is to know Lenox Avenue. This 39-block-long thoroughfare runs north from the end of Central Park at 110th Street, renamed Central Park North.

Harlem has cleaner (and dirtier) avenues, quieter avenues and richer thoroughfares; but whatever dynamism, whatever vitality exists in Harlem, there is evidence of it on Lenox Avenue.

At 110th Street, Lenox begins routinely. A church in a converted movie house. A fried-chicken takeout shop. A windowless, burned-out, abandoned tenement. The Martin Luther King Jr. Towers, a low-income project whose previous name—Stephen Foster Houses — was changed after residents objected to living in a project named for a composer of songs about "darkies."

At 149th Street, where Lenox Avenue ends, stands Esplanade Gardens, a cooperative middle-income housing complex with a Harlem River view and outdoor swimming pool.

Nation of Islam Temple

Along the avenue: At 116th Street, topped by a perpetually revolving star and crescent, the Nation of Islam's Temple No. 7, its schools, shops and restaurant. This mosque was led by Malcolm X. At 125th Street, Harlem's main commercial thoroughfare crosses Lenox running west to the Hudson River and east to the Harlem River and the Triborough Bridge.

Looking west from the intersection, the most prominent structure is the community's tallest building, the State Office Building in Harlem. It was built, after controversy over whether it was needed, by Governor Rockefeller, at Seventh Avenue (now Adam Clayton Powell Jr. Boulevard in Harlem) and 125th Street. Diagonally opposite is the old Theresa Hotel. Daily round-the-clock gatherings of those the black press termed "sportsmen" and "socialites" made that the community's most notable corner.

Fidel Castro and his Cuban delegation to the United Nations were housed at the Theresa in 1960. Prime Ministers Castro and Nikita S. Khrushchev hugged each other on the hotel's balcony, and the Cuban delegates are said to have cooked chickens on the floors of their hotel rooms. The hotel is now an office building — Theresa Towers.

Where Michaux's Was

Farther west on 125th Street is the Apollo Theater, which propelled so many older black entertainers into the big time. The Apollo is now frequently closed because younger big-time entertainers charge too much to perform there, and they can make more money in one night at, say, Madison Square Garden, than in a week at the Apollo.

At the Lenox-125th intersection stands the now-defunct National Memorial Bookstore. Its proprietor, Lewis Michaux, retired after 40 years of selling books to men who later became leaders of African nations and to black Americans who had believed for decades in the validity of black power.

East from the intersection is another tall new building: the 15-story Charles A. Vincent office building, 55 West 125th Street, with an elegant cocktail lounge and restaurant, Vincent's Place—one of the few Harlem clubs regularly providing live music.

Farther east is Fifth Avenue, Manhattan's east-west dividing line. At 2033 Fifth Avenue, half a block north of 125th Street, is the Studio Museum of Harlem, a small, vibrant institution with regular exhibitions of paintings, sculpture and photography by black artists. At 9 East 125th Street, just around the corner, is Barbara Ann Teer's National Black Theater, which also has a notable restaurant.

Eighteen of the city's black drama and dance groups will perform between Wednesday and July 25, during the Black Theater Alliance's fifth annual performing arts festival at the American Place Theater, 111 West 46th Street, between the Avenue of the Americas and Seventh Avenue. For information: 247-5840.

Harlem Began Here

This is the area where Harlem got started as a black community around 1903. The Harlem the world knew about was largely on Lenox Avenue. The Cotton Club, where blacks worked and whites played, was here, at 143d Street; the Savoy Ballroom was also in this neighborhood.

Today, at or near the intersection of Lenox Avenue and 135th Street are some famous Harlem landmarks. One is Harlem Hospital Center, with its tall, blue and white Martin Luther King Jr. Pavilion—Dr. King was treated here after a woman stabbed him in a five and dime store on 125th Street. West of the intersection is the Schomburg Collection of Negro Literature and History, a branch of the New York Public Library.

Also to the west is the Harlem Young Men's Christian Association, traditionally a temporary home for new New Yorkers hoping to capture the city. East of the intersection, behind Harlem Hospital, are the Riverton Apartments. Built by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for blacks when the company denied them residence in its downtown developments — Stuyvesant Town and Peter Cooper Village—Riverton is now owned by an interracial group including Charles A. Vincent, the office-building owner.

Riverton is different. Its grounds and buildings are the community's best kept. And its older residents maintain old ways with gentle good mornings, men tipping their hats to women and people holding doors for one another.

View

s have restau- ir tallest build- e can compete with the dazzlement of the view New York affords. Of the several vantage points from which one can enjoy that vista the following two present the best choices.

Windows on the World, 1 World Trade Center (938-1111), is on the 107th floor of the World Trade Center's north tower, and is currently and justifiably the most exciting and talked about eatery in town. Setting off the brightness and magic of the incomparable view, is a dining room done in glittering brass and soft pastels, terraced so all tables have a glimpse of the scene below and with an original and interesting menu representing an international crossroads of gastronomy. Although preparation can be uneven here, there are some dependably excellent choices, among them such appetizers as pike and spinach paté, clams in green onion aspic and cheese profiterolles.

Roast sirloin of beef with mushroom puree and sauce Perigourdine, a crisp roasted duck with a sauce blissfully free of fruit, pressed and fried squab tabaka and rack of lamb James Beard have all proven to be the best entree selections. There's no way of going wrong on dessert. All are superb, most especially a tangy lemon tart. There is a wonderful buffet at lunch daily, and all day Sunday, from noon until 9 P.M.

The Hors D'Oeuvrerie serves Danish open sandwiches and grill menu items at lunch, and an international array of appetizers in the evening.

Windows on the World operates as a private club at lunch, and outside guests must pay a cover charge of $10 for the host, plus $3 for each guest. There is no cover nor minimum at night or for the super Grand Buffet Sunday meal at $$9.75. Reservations are extremely difficult to get for any meal here, but the Sunday buffet is the most likely. Small parties who want to have dinner very early or very late may also stand a chance. For others, a drink at the bar, view and all, may have to suffice.

While the view from the 65th floor may not quite rival that from the 107th, it is breathtaking nonetheless, seen from The Rainbow Room atop the RCA building at 330 Rockefeller Plaza (PL 7-9090). This room is one the great classic vestiges of the art-deco moderne of the 30's, with dark green walls, soaring windows and lots of lucite and brass, the sort of setting in which one half expects to see Fred Astaire give Ginger Rogers a whirl or two coming down the curved stairways. There is old-time dance music, and an old-time menu of more or less continental food. Unfortunately a little tacky both in setting and service, the Rainbow Room does provide food above minimum acceptability.

Carpaccio, an appetizer of paper thin slices of raw beef topped with a sharp green sauce and the tiny, meat-filled pasta, tortellini in a cheese and cream Alfredo sauce were the better selections, even though the tortellini were slightly overcooked and a bit bland on a recent try. Avoid duckling paté and the relatively tasteless soups.

Stick to the simplest entrees, such as grilled entrecote and rack of lamb and avoid complicated creations with sauces. A chicken Kiev sampled recently was ruined by a heavy brown gravy and an entrecote au poivre was drowned in cream sauce. Broiled salmon steak with sauce Choron was well prepared and roast duckling, served at the next table, looked properly crisp and golden. Desserts were rich and gloppy but less than inspired.

On weekdays this, too, is a private club at lunch, but dinner is open to the public seven days a week and there is an $8.25 Sunday brunch with an excellent menu. The price fixed pre-theater dinner is $12.50 and a la carte entrees range from $7.75 to $10.75. There is a $2 per person music charge Sunday through Thursday and a $2.75 charge Fridays and Saturdays. There is no music on Monday. The Rainbow Grill, adjoining this room, is more of a night club, with the comedian Mark Russell appearing this week. The menu is similar to the Rainbow Room's, but with added grill choices.

Steaks

It is one of the better known anomalies of the restaurant business that, while other cities such as Kansas City and Chicago are important market centers for beef, the best steaks consistently are sold to New York wholesalers for the restaurant trade. Steak lovers, therefore, are in luck here, most of all at the following places.

Palm, at 837 Second Avenue, near 45th Street (687-2953). A local landmark, long popular with journalists and anyone else who goes for sawdust-covered floors, cartoons of local personalities on the walls, a plain pipe-rack edcor and a noisy, convivial, no-frills setting. Impeccable steaks, poetic cottage fried potatoes, and 4- to 5-pound broiled lobsters that look like sea monsters are the most popular favorites, along with chops, roast beef, broiled fish, and tomato and onion salad.

Although there's no menu here to clue you to the fact, the kitchen also turns out excellent pasta, all sorts of veal scallopini preparations, and a few very special dishes such as steak stone (sliced steak over sauteed pimentos and onion) and beefsteak a la Deutsch, (chunks of beef braised with onions, green peppers, mushrooms and noodles). The cheesecake is as creamy and vanilla-scented as it should be, the drinks huge, and prices high, with the sirloin steak at $12, strictly a la carte, and dinner entrees from $7.50 to $24 for the giant lobsters.

Palm Too, 840 Second Avenue, just across the street, offers the same menus with only a shade less atmosphere. Lunch and dinner at both are served Monday through Friday. Both close Saturday and Sunday in summer.

Christ Cella, 160 East 46th Street, (OX 7-2479). Equally good quality steaks, lobsters, potatoes, and salads, impeccably prepared, and one of the world's greatest cream-filled Napoleon pastry tarts make Christ Cella an equally good choice in the same price range. The difference here is a quieter, roomier setting that is a bit innocuous and overly bright but much preferred by those who like their beef far from the madding crowd.

Prices at Christ Cella are similar to those at the Palm, with $14.25 for a sirloin steak with potato and $23 for a 3-pound lobster. Lunch and dinner Monday through Saturday. Closed Sundays.

Just about any major sporting event in or around New York, fills up Gallagher's Steakhouse, 228 W. 52d Street (245-5336), a colorful wood-paneled tavern setting that is a favorite with the Broadway and sports crowd who gather 'round the huge bar.

While the steaks, chops and lobsters here do not quite come up to the perfection of the preceeding two choices, they are way above average. A la carte luncheon entrees range from $5.85 to $9.95, while the range at dinner goes to $15 for lobster. The one pound sirloin steak is $11.50. Open seven days.

Fish

Visitors who like fish and seafood would be wise to stick to many of the specialties of local and East Coast waters, not available as fresh elsewhere in the country. Long Island flounder, bluefish, mackerel and porgies, New England scrod and cod, Maine and Montauk lobsters, Maryland crabmeat, and local clams —especially steamers— are among the best to sample.

Seafare of the Aegean, 25 West 56th Street, (LT 1-0540). The most elegant and impeccable seafood house in town. Brilliant red walls hung with decorative paintings, snowy cloths, and magnificent floral arrangements provide a properly handsome backdrop. The restaurant offers flawless versions of standard fish preparations such as broiling, frying and poaching, along with an interesting array of house specialties, many Greek inspired. Shrimp stuffed with feta cheese and baked with tomatoes, striped bass in an egg-lemon broth, spicy devilled crabmeat and a delicate bouillabaisse are only a few of the better featured dishes.

There are also some good, moderately priced Greek wines. Entrees range from $6.75 to $14.95 for lobster and there are usually three price fixed table d'hote lunches at $6.75. Lunch and dinner are served seven days a week.

Oyster Bar and Restaurant, Grand Central Station at Park Avenue and 42d Street (532-3888). The cavernous, sprawling and exciting eating place has recently been restored and is even better than it was when it earned its nationwide reputation. The Oyster Bar still turns out the country's richest and creamiest oyster stew, along with a more peppery oyster pan roast, and there are many varieties of oysters and clams sold singly, so an assortment can be sampled. At both counter and tables one can have all of the standard seafood classics, plus a daily choice of exotic fish stews, among them bouillabaisse, Belgian waterzoi and Russian solianka, as well as varieties of fish rarely found on restaurant menus.

Entrees range from $5.85 to $9.95 with one of the city's great bargains being a shore dinner with clam chowder, steamed clams, a whole lobster, or, a half lobster and half a broiled chicken, cole slaw, potatoes, dessert and coffee for $9.95. Closed Saturday and Sunday; lunch and dinner Monday through Friday.

The Scene

Though gourmets may well shudder at the very idea, many people go to restaurants for reasons other than food, which brings us to this group of dining places. Each enjoys fame and popularity for reasons far outside their kitchens, though some, not too incidentally, do well in that department also.

The Four Seasons, 99 East 52d Street (754-9494) remains one of the most awesomely beautiful modern restaurants, and though it is a little the worse for wear, the pool dining room with its watery light, shimmering chain curtains and lavish plantings is a setting worth seeing.

Cooking here is uneven, and on a recent try, the smoked salmon was dry and crumbly while delicate quenelles of pike in a sharp, pungent sorrel sauce and a seviche of scallops were both excellent. A summer vegetable soup was pure and simply delicious, but the onion was salty and much too heavily encrusted with melted cheese for an elegant dinner restaurant.

The better entree selections include breast of duckling with an orange sauce, sauteed calves liver with avocado slices, and tender tournadoes of beef with woodland mushrooms. But a cutlet of what was billed as plume de veau, was tough and dry and not helped even by its wild morels. A spinach soufflé was perfectly done, and the fried grated potatoes roesti were golden, crisp and wonderful. The pastry wagon is well worth sampling, as is the wine list.

Dinner entreees range from $9.50 to $16.50, all a la carte. There is also a $2.50 cover charge. Closed Sunday.

The "21" Club, at 21 West 52d Street (582-7200) is a handsome wood-paneled landmark, with many public and private dining rooms and a very private and unique club-like aura. It is frequented by the influential in all fields. While it is obvious that only the very best products are purchased for this august establishment, it is a shame to have to say that they are often ruined in the cooking, with burning being an all too common flaw.

If you must have dessert, stick to berries, melon, ice cream or anything else not cooked. The featured crepes soufflé were flat, limp, greasy and, again, burned. Drinks are expertly made and the wine cellar, justly famous.

Dinner entrees range from $9.75 (for the hamburger) to $14.25 with some of the special game dishes even higher. Although usually closed Saturday and Sunday in summer, "21" will be open on July 10th and 11th, as well as on all weekdays.

The Russian Tearoom, 150 West 57th Street (CO 5-0947), is a rare combination of wonderful food, convivial atmosphere but with a loyal following of Broadway personalities, music and ballet aficionadoes, and theatrical celebrities, most especially it seems, comics. It is perpetually Christmas here, with silver tinsel and red tree ornaments rimming the chandeliers. Wall niches hold an exceptional collection of old samovars.

Start with smoothly unctuous eggplant caviar, or one of the perfect herrings mantled with sour cream and onion slices, or red caviar or what may be the most dependably good chopped chicken livers any restaurant in the city turns out. Soups are hot and hearty and come with flaky meat-filled turnover, piroshky. The hot cabbage or cold beet borscht is never less than marvelous, and the creamy rossolnik, with its chicken giblets and wings, barley and vegetables is almost a meal it itself.

Chicken Kiev is sublimely crisp without, meltingly golden with hot butter within, always on a bed of well cooked rice. Shashlik is among the expected and excellent entrees and the blini, although recently accompanied by an inferior grade of dried up red salmon caviar, are correctly made with buckwheat flour and always heart-warming and savory. For dessert there are uninspired pastries, but a more unusual choice is moist, gently sweet halvah or the rich pudding dessert Gourieff kasha, dressed with fruit compote. There are also a number of good cheese entrees, on the order of blintzes, most especially sirniki, blinchiki and nalistniki.

Prices are moderate here with complete dinners from $8.50 to 14.25. Open seven days, with a special brunch menu on Sunday.

Maxwell's Plum, 64th Street and First Avenue (628-2100). A favorite of the swinging set, the singles action at this bar rivals the rush hour subway crush. Despite that, it is one of the most spectacularly beautiful restaurants in the country, and a forerunner of many of the art nouveau, stained glass extravaganzas now popular throughout the nation. In addition the food is better than anyone has a right to expect and the prices are only moderately high. Early evening is the time for families, here and after 8 or 9 P.M., the "in" set takes over. Patés are fair, but the raw beef carpaccio with a green pepper sauce was excellent. Bouillabaisse, though made in a delicious broth, was full of badly overcooked fish, but a piece of grilled red snapper was about as good as it could get. Sauteed chicken livers with apples and onions, not a personal favorite, was properly prepared, as was a Caesar salad, and a hot terrine of pike with beurre blanc sauce. Roast beef looked well seared and rosy within.

There are burgers and simple dishes such as German sausages with homemade applesauce and sauteed onions. Desserts were disappointing.

A la carte entrees range from $3.85 to $13.75. Open 7 days for lunch and dinner.

P. J. Clarke's, 915 Third Avenue, near 55th Street (PL 9-1650), is an old-style saloon with simple hearty food and a following that includes jet-setters (or what's left of them), members of the advertising and publishing world, movie stars and models, and most especially top athletes and sportscasters. The bar with its tile floor, etched glass doors and comfortably broken down aspect is always three-deep, and the back room, with tables covered by red-checkered cloths, is usually full.

Although the menu offers fancy "continental" fare, it is best to stick to chili, burgers, steaks, steak tartar, and either chef's or spinach salad. Burgers, by the way, tend to be better at the up-front counter than when served at tables. The superburger, topped with a herbaceous Bearnaise sauce is a personal favorite. Recent tastings of cold zucchini soup, a poached salmon ruined with bay leaves or perhaps pickling spices, and one of the fancier veal dishes left much to be desired. The cold lemon mousse was great, but the cheese cake was sticky and ordinary.

Prices are very moderate, with dinner entrees from $3 to $7.20, and they're even lower at lunch. Portions are large, except for the hamburgers, which range from $1.85 to $2.40. There are many good foreign beers on tap and the Irish coffee is expertly constructed. Open seven days.

The Stage Delicatessen and Restaurant, 834 Seventh Avenue (245-7850). The scene here is one of big-time operators, including garment district executives, theater personalities and night owls of all persuasions, who have in common their love of pastrami and corned beef sandwiches, Jewish style entrees such as boiled beef and chicken fricassee and Dr. Brown's Cel-Ray tonic, although there are competently made bar drinks as well. The decor is red, glowing and garish, the crowd colorful and the eavesdropping incomparable. A pastrami sandwich with a good quarter of a pound of meat is $3.25. Complete dinners range from $4.75 to $10. Open seven days.

Three of New York's best known places leave something to be desired where food is concerned but still offer a special atmosphere.

Toots Shor, 233 West 33d Street (279-8150), is now only a part owner of this latest version of his famed establishment, and is on the premises only occasionally. The decor is without distinction as is the food, but the menu is at least limited and the dishes bearable. Stick to steaks and roast beef. Lamb chops were fair and the baked potato better than the French fries. Drinks were large and well-made, but the desserts were skippable.

Dinner entree from $8.50 to $11.95, with less expensive selections at lunch. Closed Saturday and Sunday.

Sardi's, 234 West 44th Street (221-8440), is still the place where the theater crowd gathers for first-night reviews, still the place they go for lunch and late-night drinks and suppers. The walls are covered with famous caricatures of well known and recognizable theater personalities and the magic is almost enough to make you forget about the food. The plainest is the rule here. Stick to salads, roast beef, steak and forget all house specialties that are invariably drowned in a starchy cream sauce. The canneloni is not bad and, in general, all food seems better at lunch than at dinner. So does the service. The upstairs bar is the place for celebrity watchers and the best tables go to the famous. Dinner entrees range from $4.95 to $10.95. Open seven days.

Luchow's, 110 East 14th Street (477-4860). There is no restaurant more reminiscent of New York in its turn of the century heydey than this one. Still marvelously handsome with its dark wood walls, etched glass skylights and spacious rooms, it is almost ruined by the garlands of junky honeycomb crepe paper hanging from the corners and the dreary food. Even so, there is a string trio playing Straussian waltzes alternating with an oom-pah-pah band of lederhosen-clad Bavarians, and the setting still has vestiges of gemütlichkeit, most interesting to lovers of antique interiors. The herring appetizers are not bad, the soups quite acceptable, and the boiled beef good if overcooked. Schnitzel Holstein tends to be tough and greasy and the apple pancake hopeless, but sauerbraten, smoked pork loin and the sausage dishes are better choices. So is the beer, on tap and served in huge schooners. Complete dinners range from $8.95 to $13.95 and portions are large. Lunch and dinner are served 7 days.

Larry Rivers, one of the most versatile figurative artists of the New York School, applied his formidable sketching talents to the umbrellas in the Promenade Cafe at Rockefeller Center "because they looked so abstract."

What to Avoid on Eighth Avenue

By SELWYN RAAB

It is in the heart of Manhattan but it is known as the Minnesota Strip. It extends along Eighth Avenue from 42d to 52d Streets and it has become New York's sleaziest vice supermarket for prostitutes, pimps, massage parlors, pornography stores, topless bars and assorted criminals.

The Minnesota Strip also is an easy place for a visitor to get into trouble in New York.

"My advice is to avoid those streets," said Captain John J. McEvoy, commanding officer of the police public morals unit assigned to that area. "If you do find yourself there, stay away from the hookers and stay out of the massage parlors."

Captain McEvoy and most police officials challenge the theory that prostitution and massage parlors on the Minnesota Strip should be ignored by the police as "victimless crime" categories.

"Many people think that the hookers and massage parlors involve individual concepts of morality and ethics," Captain McEvoy said. "What these people don't recognize is that these activities attract different kinds of more dangerous criminal elements that spin off into robberies, thefts and muggings."

'Murphy Games'

The police label many of the crimes associated with prostitutes as "Murphy games." Two of the most typical "Murphy games" usually have the following scenarios.

A customer, or "John," is picked up in the street and accompanied by a prostitute to a hotel room. Inside the room, the customer is met by a holdupman-partner of the prostitute who demands the "John's" money. If the customer resists, he almost certainly will be assaulted. The robbery victims rarely report these incidents to the police because of the embarrassment of a liaison with a prostitute.

Another common "Murphy game" involves a fake procurer. The intended victim is approached by a man in a bar or on the street who offers to arrange an immediate date with a prostitute. When the price — usually about $20—is paid the customer is instructed to go to a room in a nearby hotel. There is either no such room or no woman there.

Massage Parlors

Massage parlors also can be more expensive than anticipated, Captain McEvoy said.

"You have to undress completely and pay before the girls offer any services in those joints," he explained. "It's easy for someone in the massage parlor to lift a wallet and when the guy comes out he finds his money and credit cards are gone."

The police are uncertain how the Minnesota Strip got its nickname about a year ago. Anti-vice officers said that the pimps may have originated the name because of the large number of teenage prostitutes from the Midwest who now walk the streets of Eighth Avenue.

Police officials believe that the Democratic Party convention will attract more pickpockets and more prostitutes to midtown Manhattan.

"Wherever you have big crowds you're certain to have pickpockets," one officer said, pointing out that the best pickpockets can steal as much as $1,000 a day.

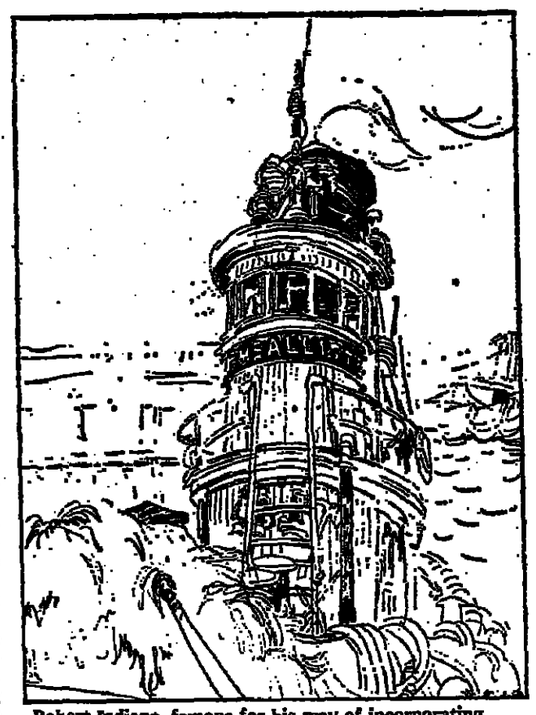
Most pickpockets work in teams of two or three. Their usual technique is to distract the victim by jostling or distracting him while an accomplice removes a wallet from a man's pocket or a woman's handbag.

Police experts offer these suggestions to avoid the feathery fingers of a pickpocket.

¶Look alert and aggressive and most pickpockets will stay away from you.

¶No pocket in a man's clothes is entirely safe but the least accessible one is the inside breast pocket of a jacket.

¶Women's handbags should be held under the arm, rather than by a strap or draped over a shoulder. Bury your wallet under other articles in a handbag, instead of placing it on top.



Robert Indiana, famous for his way of incorporating words such as "LOVE" into his paintings and constructions, says he's often inspired by the names of tugboats as they roam the river near his home in Lower Manhattan.

"New York Legends" Welcome The Democrats

This Sunday a host of "New York Legends" welcome the Democrats at Madison Square Garden Steer Palace. Such luminaries as Mayor and Mrs. Beame, Governor Carey, Toots Shor, Jack Dempsey and many other celebrities play host in N. Y.'s first formal expression of welcome to our distinguished political visitors. The party, co-chaired by Lt. Gov. Mary Anne Krupsak and former transportation commissioner Michael Lazar is the toughest invitation these days to come by. No doubt one reason is the spectacular fashion show that world famous designer Halston will be presenting that evening. Of course, Halston's very close friends including Lisa Minelli, Jackie Onassis and his latest convert, Liz Taylor have all been invited to the Steer Palace to share the spotlight with him, so all in all it should be a bang-up display of N. Y. hospitality.

Joining in all the hoopla surrounding the Democratic Convention will be Luchow's Restaurant, fulfilling the culinary needs of our visiting gourmets. The management of Luchow's is well aware of those dishes which are particular Democratic favorites — such as Drei Mignons a la Berliner; Breast of Capon a la Luchow — since the staff has been catering to Gov. Carey, Mayor Beame and their staffs since both fellows took office several years ago. In honor of the Democratic Convention, Luchow's will be departing from its time-honored custom of honoring a particular Celebrity Guest each Sunday, and instead will be saluting the Democratic delegates to the convention all week long! If you've never been to Luchow's before, this is definitely the week to make what will surely be the first of many visits to the 14th St. landmark.

The city is overflowing with antique reminders of yesteryear. Needless to say, the Tall Ships have been the talk of the town, but a bit uptown in the General Motors Building at 5th Ave. and 59th Street, fascinating and notable antique cars from the GM past will be on display Monday through Friday from 9 AM to 9 PM and Saturday from 10 AM to 6 PM. Admission is free to the exhibit, just as it is free to the Autopub's museum of automemorabilia down in the GM Building's lower plaza. The 'Pub's display includes — along with replicas of the old time Duesenberg, Model T, and Stutz Bearcat, designed so that you can actually dine in them — the sleek chassis of today's ultramodern racing cars that have actually seen action at the Indy and Daytona Speedways. The Autopub Restaurant is a must for model car buffs AND a must for discriminating diners who are looking for something new and unique in an eating experience.

This past Tuesday, the Riverboat Nightclub at 34th & Fifth presented one of the great movie legends — Miss Denise Darcel—in her N. Y. club debut. The Riverboat cleverly planned Miss Darcel's 3 week engagement to coincide with the Democratic Convention, since her sensuous style is just what the hard-working delegates will be soothed by after the heat of the main arena in the Garden. New York's biggest nightclub—only a short two block walk from the Garden — also offers the city's biggest bonanza! The two-shows nightly will see no increase in price and the management's guarantee of all you can drink adds additional value to this already incredible bargains. It's still all you can drink of the hard stuff variety — a N. Y. Cut Sirloin and dancing to two great bands. The total tab for this "whole nite on the town" is just 10.95 per plus the 1.95 music charge — Even the Republicans will find this easy on the pocketbook.

Buddy Rich and his 16 man Killer Force band sold out Storyville Jazz Club 3 weeks ago. Nothing succeeds like success, so George Wein of Newport Jazz fame and boss of Storyville, has booked Buddy & Band for a return gig beginning next Monday (for 6 days). Two shows, Monday - Thursday and three shows on Friday and Saturday. Storyville's on 58th off Madison Avenue and must be heard to be seen. Seating is limited so better call 755-1640.

On 39 & 7th, smuggled in the heart of the Garment Center, lies one of the City's swingingest "Boy meets Girl" bars. The name of the place is Cafe Coco. At lunch hour, Coco serves the elite execs of Seventh Avenue but at sundown it reverts to the after hours "office" of young models and unattached ready to wear salesmen. Coco is a short stroll from the Garden . . . perfect rendezvous for "uncommitted" delegates.

"An Incredibly Inexpensive Greek Restaurant"

". . . I was complaining, in a SoHo gallery, that it was difficult to find decent inexpensive restaurants, and a couple of artists spontaneously mentioned Z and then begged me to refrain from ruining it by writing it up.

Fat chance. I was there that night for a test run, and was lucky to get a table in this rather large restaurant. Le tout New York except the In bunch seemed to be there, and I don't know that I've ever seen a happier crowd in a restaurant, except maybe one night a couple of years ago in Herakhion.

At lunch the next day, however, the place was sparsely populated in spite of the fact that the "Z special" (mousaka, the classic dish of eggplant baked with chopped beef topped with cheese custard, and served at Z with more rice and vegetable than you can eat, plus a bowl of Greek salad that included a grape-leaf dolma), was near the top of the price list at $2.85 and couldn't have been better. As an experiment I made do with a sonvlaki sandwich — generous pieces of broiled beef and lamb in a pita bread pouch with lettuce and tomato — only $1.65 and all I wanted to eat, proving that you can get out of Z at lunchtime well fed for two dollars including tax and a modest tip.

Start with the pate maison or the house crepe which is filled with scallops, shrimp, and mushrooms. Now, as it has been since the restaurant opened, the roast leg of lamb is spectacularly good. Also noteworthy are the veal kidneys either broiled, or bordelaise. As the restaurant's name implies, there are a number of broiler offerings as well. From Every Land, For Every Palate

By JOHN CANADAY

NEW YORK'S French and Italian restaurants and American steak-and-fish houses are the core of the city's restaurant life, but visitors who want something not offered in their hometown—for instance, Ga.—can find exotic fare in the city's plethora of estaurants. Here are some that this department has lependable. Prices are moderate unless otherwise moderate by New York standards, meaning you can for under $10 a person, drinks and wine not enian: Dardanelles, 86 University Place (CH 2-8990), ight, cheerful, attractively decorated place with t authentic fare.

zilian: The most popular of this ethnic group is Pavilion, 141 East 52d Street (PL 8-8129), but if t unadulterated, unsophisticated cooking at its best, the place for you is Cabana Carioca, a rimitive, steamy room on the second floor at 123 th Street (581-8088). Low to moderate.

ese: Embarrassment of riches here. There are five nese restaurants for every single one that we have mention.

es at Pearl's, 38 West 48th Street (586-1060), are ight after but can be had in advance. The cuisine ese, the most palatable to most Americans, but l spice up a dish if asked. Her lemon chicken is Better count on spending a bit beyond the moder-

a Chinese restaurant that means hot and spicy ays hot and spicy, try Hunam, 845 Second Avenue, treet (MU 7-7471), where a Szechuan menu of a includes some mild dishes also. Szechuan Palace, nd Avenue, at 70th Street (628-8652), is a simpler erwise answering to the description given for ove. Uncle Tai's, 1059 Third Avenue, near 62d 8-0850), has a varied menu, good service, pleasphere and excellent food over a wide range.

ple-of-novelties, more or less, in the Chinese t, are Oh-Ho-So, 395 West Broadway, between d Spring Streets (966-6110), which will give you o get a glimpse of the new bohemia while enjoyepared dishes, and Bernstein-on-Essex, 135 Essex 3-3900), which is, of all things, Chinese-kosher. n't tell you, you'd hardly know the pork dishes ared with veal.

oslovak: Vasata, 339 East 75th Street (650-1686), 1358 First Avenue, at 73d Street (988-3505), are ling places that go in vigorously for atmosphere. Filoxenia, 475 Park Avenue, at 57th Street is the city's sleekest Greek restaurant. We have and service varying from satisfactory to superb. above the moderate range, unless you order Downtown, Golden Fleece at 71 Seventh Avenue ner of Bleecker Street (243-8517), is more inby no means simple and offers hearty, well-ishes. "Z," 117 East 15th Street (254-0960), is mes boisterous and serves great mounds of food atively low prices.

rian: Jacques, 210 East 58th Street (753-5513), its Frenchified name and fancy quarters, goes autsan servings of Hungarian standards—includrian wines. Very good. Watch the prices when Indian fare is a favorite of ours, and it's a pleasure to say that much (not all) of it in New York is as good as you will find in restaurants of comparable class in India. Our favorite is India Pavilion, 325 East 54th Street (838-9702), very simple and inexpensive. You have to bring your own liquor. If something fancier is in order, there are Tandoor, 40 East 49th Street (752-3334), one of the handsomest ethnic restaurants in New York, and Gaylord, 50 East 58th Street (759-1710), very pukka-sahib in the colonial manner. Food at both is first-rate. Maybe Tandoor has an edge. It also tends to be a bit less expensive.

In the theater district, there's Ceylon India Inn, 148 West 49th Street (265-9822), set like a true gem in the sordid glitter of porno flicks and topless bars. Once you get upstairs, it's quiet, and the food is excellent.

Japanese: It's an invasion—a Japanese restaurant every time you turn around. For the straight thing, pure Japanese, no picturesque trappings, try Kitcho, 22 West 46th Street (575-8880), where you may find yourself the only Westerner in the house. For atmosphere, including kimonoed service, Saito, 305 East 46th Street (759-8897), and Shinbashi, 280 Park Avenue, entrance on 48th Street (661-3915), combine authentic cuisine with atmosphere. Both are beyond our modest range—count on perhaps $15 a person. Robata, 30 East 61st Street (688-8120), is special, a metropolitan version of a Japanese country inn, where if you get a good seat, you watch the chefs at work.

Korean: Look no farther, Arirang House, 23 West 56th Street (LT 1-9698), is one of the most delightful restaurants in town, ethnic or nonethnic.

Mexican: Fonda la Paloma, 256 East 49th Street (421-5495), and Fonda los Milagros, 70 East 55th Street (752-6640), rise above the Tex-Mex level and include strolling musicians most nights. Since New York does not have a really classical Mexican restaurant, Pancho Villa's, 1501 Second Avenue, at 78th Street (650-1455), is one of our favorites for its vigorous treatment of familiar dishes.

Spanish: For aficionados who don't demand a stylish setting, Rincon de España, in Greenwich Village, at 226 Thompson Street (475-9891), probably serves the best Spanish food in New York. For more stylish accommodations and good food, Alicante, 251 East 53d Street (421-5360), is among the best. For something intimate in between, try Puerta Real, 243 East 58th Street (758-9788).

Thai: Bangkok Cuisine, 885 Eighth Avenue, between 52d and 53d Streets (581-8370), serves the exotic and delicate Thai dishes in purest form. Let them direct you elsewhere if they are full.

Turkish: Bosphorus East, 121 Lexington Avenue, near 28th Street (679-8370), is a pet of ours, a charmingly decorated, small restaurant with a relaxed atmosphere and a kitchen that specializes in personal variations on standard dishes. Istanbul Cuisine, 315 Amsterdam Avenue, between 74th and 75th Streets (874-9773), diminutive and immaculate, would get many Turkish food buffs' vote for the best home-style cooking. The only trouble is that by the time you order everything you want, the small items can add up to a hefty check. But a new place, Divan, 338 East 49th Street (826-1044), is making a strong bid for first-ballot nomination as the best Turkish restaurant in New York.

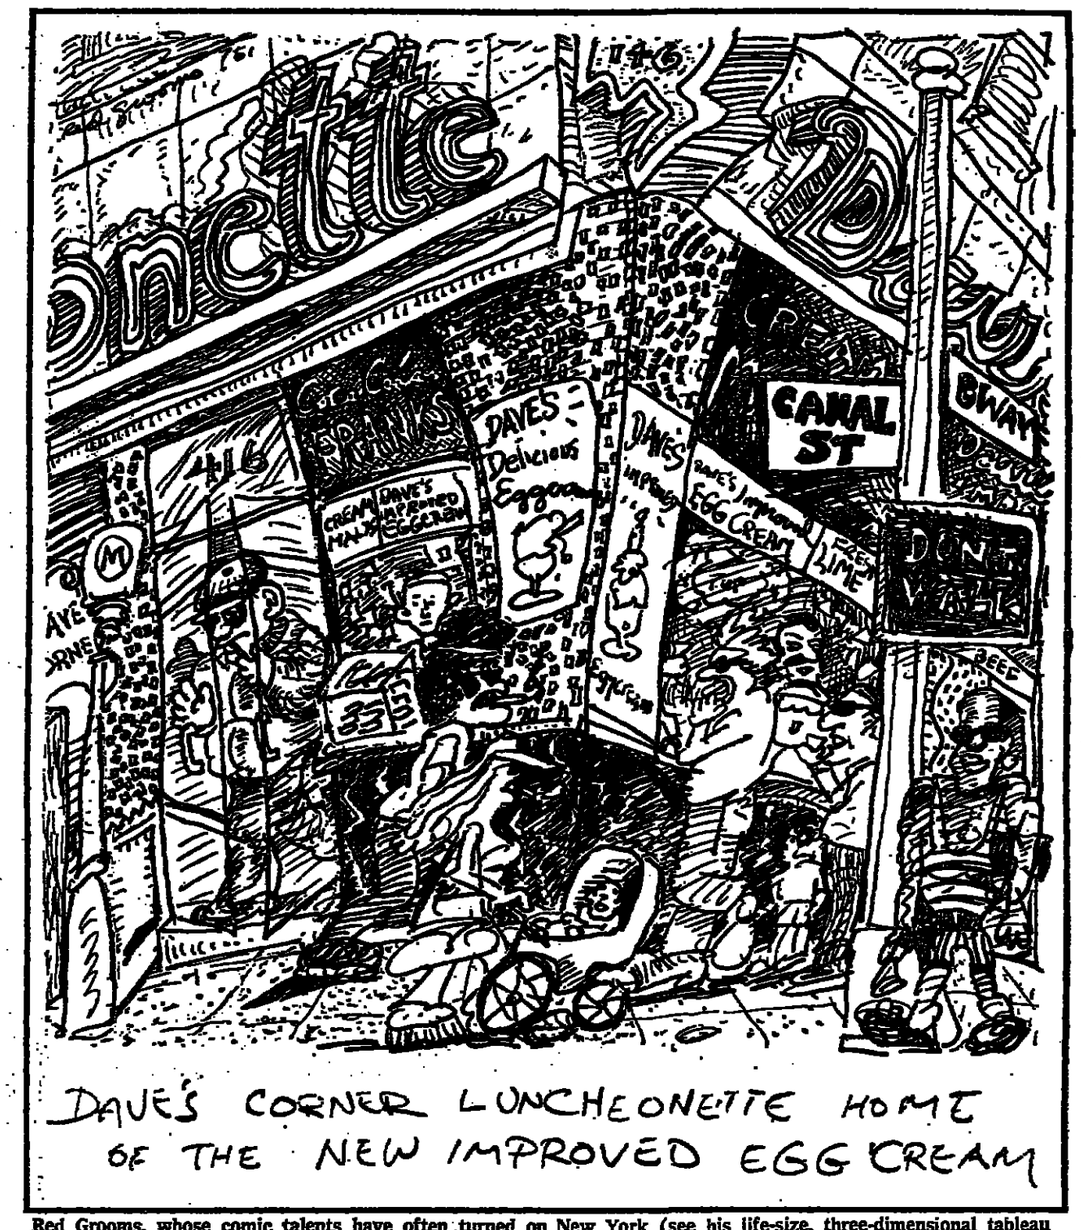
All this ethnic variety may confuse you, and you may decide that what you really want, after all, is a good Italian meal. New York is so rich in Italian restaurants of high quality that any list is bound to omit many people's favorites. However, here are some selected restaurants recently reviewed in The New York Times. The first received a four-star rating (for "extraordinary"), the rest three stars (for "excellent"). The price range is moderate to expensive.

Parioli Romanissimo, 1466 First Avenue, near 76th Street (734-9951); Alfredo's of New York, 240 Central Park South (246-7050); Ballato, 55 East Houston Street (CA 6-9683); Giambelli, 238 Madison Avenue, between 37th and 38th Streets (MU 5-8727); Gian Marino, 221 East 58th Street (PL 2-1696); Giovanni, 66 East 55th Street (PL 3-1230); Il Monello, 1460 Second Avenue, between 76th and 77th Streets (LE 5-9310); Isle of Capri, 1028 Third Avenue, at 61st Street (752-9410); Italian Pavilion, 24 West 55th Street (JU 6-5950); Lombardi, 53 Spring Street (226-9866), and Nanni, 146 East 46th Street (687-9534).



Red Grooms, whose comic talents have often turned on New York (see his life-size, three-dimensional tableau "Ruckus Manhattan," at the Marlborough Galleries) is fond of bustling street corner near his home on Mulberry Street.

r Best Bar

rke's, at Third
55th Street, is
der for the best bar in town, although there are people who dismiss it as spurious Irish and kitsch, and overcrowded by hysterics. Still, it has its faithful followers, and among them are various celebrities, who like the place for, among other things, its good draft beers. Governor Carey goes to P.J.'s, but he drinks white wine.

The Bemelmans Bar in the Carlyle at Madison Avenue and 76th Street gets customers from the art world and stray rich Europeans. It is pleasant, and it has, of course, the Ludwig Bemelmans murals. The tiny bar in the Hotel Algonquin at 59 West 44th Street, and the comfortable lounge outside the bar, attract literary people and people in search of the shades of Dorothy Parker and Robert Benchley.

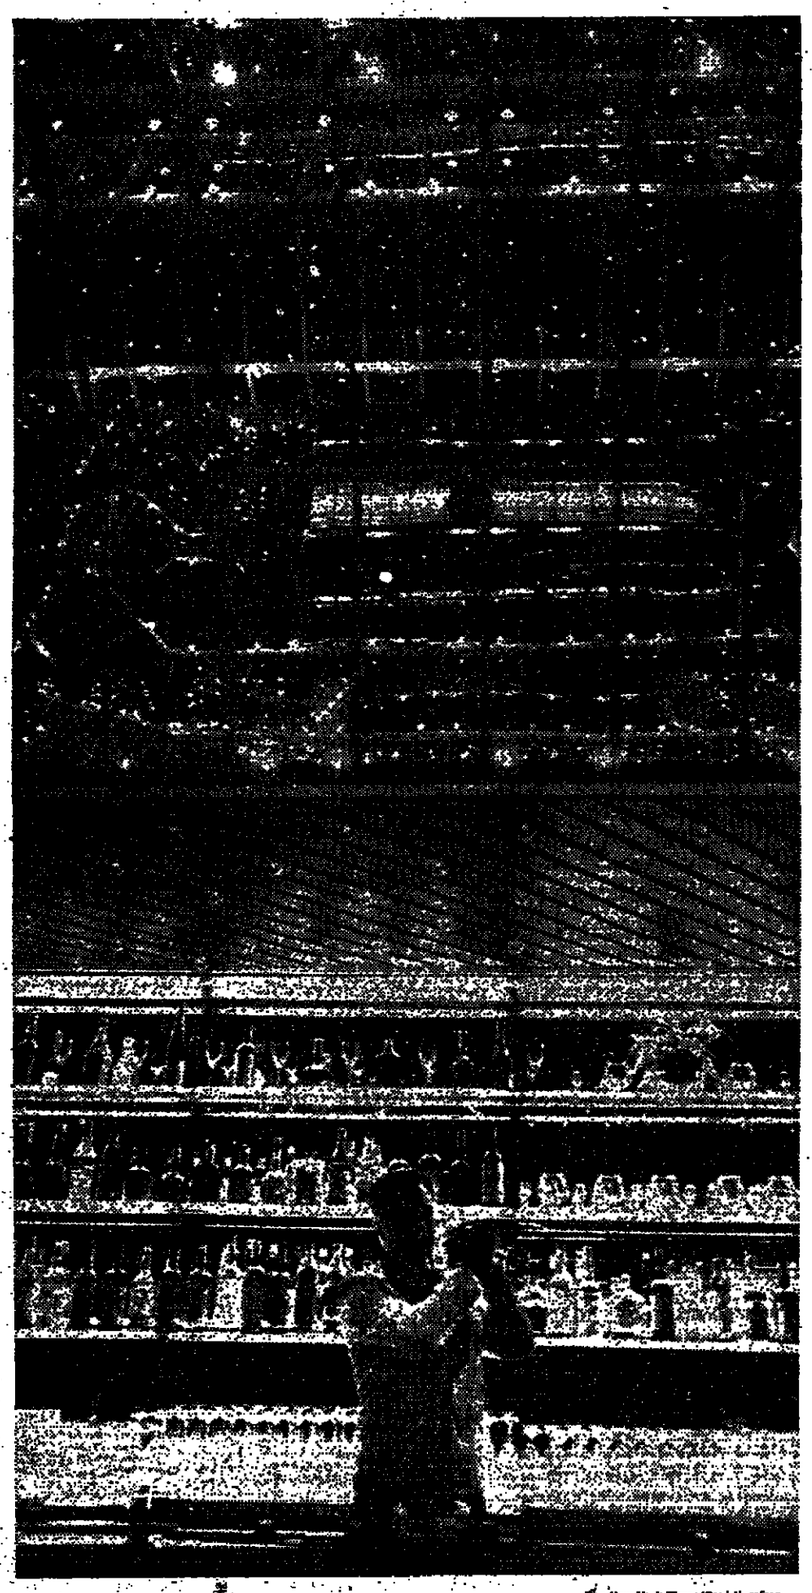
Elaine's, on Second Avenue between 88th and 89th Streets, is also fabled. It began as a writers' hangout, and then it was discovered by celebrities who, in turn, were followed by the people who always follow celebrities.

The newest, grandest bar in town is the one in the United Nations Plaza Hotel at First Avenue and 44th Street. It is silver and glass, and usually has people from the United Nations in it. The bar with the most spectacular view in town is unquestionably Windows on the World on the 107th floor of the north tower of the World Trade Center. Besides the view, it has New York's largest collection of scotch whiskies.

Sardi's, which also is fabled, is on West 44th Street between Broadway and Eighth Avenues. Theater people and theatergoers visit Sardi's, and it has a big upstairs and a small downstairs bar. Theater people, although not necessarily theatergoers, also drop in at Joe Allen's on West 46th Street between Eighth and Ninth Avenues.

The young, the chic and the beautiful, meanwhile, may drop in nearly anywhere, although in New York they usually run in groups, and this year's great new bar is next year's old hat.

Still, there is J. G. Melon at Third Avenue and 74th Street, which is only a block away from another Allen's at Third Avenue and 73d Street. They are both just around the corner from Mortimer's at Lexington Avenue and 75th Street. Mortimer's is the new rage, and as these things go, it has the patina of age. It opened last March.



Newest and grandest in town: The bar at the U.N. Plaza Hotel

Dining Out Well On a Modest Budget

While finding expensive restaurants requires no special talent, finding those with reasonable prices, decent food and pleasant settings takes a good deal more searching. New York abounds in such places, fortunately, and a few personal favorites are included here. The guideline, in addition to respectable standards of cooking, cleanliness and atmosphere, was a $7 ceiling price for a complete dinner, that included at least two and usually three courses. Tips and drinks are additional.

There are two colorful, wholly acceptable seafood houses with moderate priced menus.

Sloppy Louie's, 92 South Street (952-9657), in the Fulton Fish Market is the more interesting one. Strangers share big tables here, the paper napkins come out of dispensers, and trimmings such as bread, potatoes and salads are not much, but the fish chowder is consistently gorgeous, the broiled fish fresh and not too badly overcooked, and the frying acceptable. The bouillabaisse is a rough and ready version, and a steal at $5.35. Entrees range from $3.25 for spaghetti with clam sauce to $6.75. Soups are 50 cents per cup. The banana shortcake is a classic — real whipped cream and all. After eating, walk out and enjoy the South Street Seaport Museum. Lunch and dinner Monday through Friday; the last seating for dinner is at 8 P.M. Closed weekends.

Paddy's Clam House at 215 W. 34th Street (244-9123) is huge, old, and minimally acceptable at stunningly low prices.

There is a complete lunch for $3.24 and a dinner for $4.95, both with chowder, dessert, and coffee and a broiled fish of the day, generally fresh and ample. Trimmings are not great and fancy cooking not good, but the broiling is careful and the fish fresh, as are clams on the half shell. Manhattan chowder is preferable to the Boston variety here. The front room with the clam bar is the more pleasant in which to eat. Open seven days.

Chinatown streets are lined with eateries representing all provinces of China and at all price levels.

Foo Joy, at 13 Division Street (431-4931), across from Chatham Square, is one of the most extraordinary, featuring the crisp and only mildly peppery cooking of Fukien and unbelievable prices. Fish roll, lemon chicken, pork cutlets with scallions, a Buddhist dish of 17 vegetables, the house duck and clams in black bean sauce are only a few worth trying. Dinner here averages out to about $5 per person tops, with more than enough to eat. There are no tablecloths, liquor or desserts. Lunch and dinner, seven days.

Monte's, 97 McDougal Street (OR 4-9456) Freshly laundered tablecloths, a pleasant little bar and formally attired waiters lend distinction to this Greenwich Village restaurant. The food is deliciously, copiously Italian, with creditable pastas and equally good meat and fish dishes. Entrees range from $3.50 to $7 with pasta and a vegetable and generally no one has room for both appetizer and dessert. Canneloni, manicotti, linguine with white clam sauce are recommended, as is the broiled fish, the squid, beef rollatine and the veal chop. Closed Tuesdays.

Paper Napkins But Gorgeous Chowder

Ye Waverly Inn, 16 Bank Street (CH 3-9396). Also in the Village and a landmark, this restaurant is especially suitable for the Bicentennial year. It is a typical colonial tavern, with fireplaces, trestle tables and a snug service bar. The food is all-American and a bargain. Roast loin of pork, huge crisp quarters of fried chicken, chicken pot pie, and almost greaseless duck are usually on the menu, along with several soups for starters, homemade buns, and tearoomy, but good, desserts. Avoid continental specialties. Complete dinners go from $5.50 to $8.95 for steak, and less at lunch. A la carte entrees are also available for $1.25 less than dinner. Open seven days.

Melinas, 100 University Place (255-3699) in Greenwich Village, and The Pantheon, 689 Eighth Avenue (586-9672), are two Greek restaurants with dinners that come in well under the $7 ceiling. The first is less formal with a Greek Island cafe atmosphere and very good entrees, although the appetizers are less than great. Moussaka was especially satisfying as was a braised lamb shank. Melinas is also the less expensive with complete dinners for $4.75 to $6.25, including an unusually crunchy nut and honey baklava pastry. The Pantheon is more formal, with tablecloths, a service bar and excellent appetizers, most especially the artichokes simmered in oil, and the fish roe puree, taramasalata. Lamb braised with okra, many fish dishes, shish kebobs and so on are all well done. Dinners range from $4.20 to $8.25 complete. Open seven days.

Finding French food beneath this low ceiling price is perhaps the most difficult of all, but a few specialty places makes this possible, though not with complete meals.

Mme. Romaine de Lyon, 32 East 61st Street (758-2422), offers a very French cafe setting with paintings and floral cloths and anything you want to eat as long as it's an omelette. There are 600 versions here, along with croissant or brioche, a salad, pastry or chocolate mousse, and wine. While expensive when compared to usual omelettes, these are all made to order with three eggs and meat, fish, cheese and vegetable fillings that make them satisfying meals. A particular favorite is Rochambeau, made with mushrooms, spinach, sausage and cheese. Prices range from $3.15 to $12 but with croissant, a shared salad, and dessert it is possible to stay under $7, and with considerable style.

Mimosa, 153 East 33d Street (MU 5-2595) has only about 40 seats and serves canneloni, crepes, quiche, ratatouille, a soup or two, salad Nicoise and patés. Most choices are between $1.95 and $2.75, with onion soup at 75 cents and paté at 90 cents. Rough white plaster walls and yellow trimmings make this bright and pleasant. Food can be ordered to take out. Closed Sunday.

Ruc, 312 East 72d Street (RH 4-9185). Czechoslovakian and Hungarian food are served up in delectable and gigantic portions here with complete and staggering dinners from $4 to $7.50. The rooms are small and pleasantly tavernlike and there's a pocket-size garden beyond. Boiled beef, duck, creamy paprikash sauce on tender chicken or veal with dumplings are all stand-bys of regulars. Apricot dumplings with poppy seeds are among the better desserts. Cakes are not up to the rest of the fare. Open seven days, dinner only.

IN NEW YORK... RESTAURANTS NIGHT CLUBS

Est. 1879.

A visit to Gage & Tollner is a nostalgic trip into the past. For we are one of the last of the great original Gay 90s eating houses. Today, we are a landmark. Our elegant dining room still echoes with the gaiety of the "good old days." Our menu still draws patrons from near and far to savor what many call the best American-style cooking in the country. And the service continues to reflect the hospitality of that bygone era. At Gage & Tollner, the art of making patrons happy has never been lost. It's how we came to fame.

NEW YORK TIMES "GOING OUT GUIDE" June 24, 1976

STRUM & SMILE Many Greenwich Village cabarets are bedlam on Saturdays—not, perhaps, the ideal time to sample a new club. Even with waiting lines at David's Harp, 131 West 3d Street (several doors east of the Waverly Theater), all was well, starting with the door courtesy before ("Welcome") and after ("Come back").

Inside this clean, cheerful night roost, the tables were crowded with young people and family groups, basking contentedly in the folk-rock music—a swingy outpouring of Middle East-Mediterranean melody and rhythm from a young quintet headed by Shlomo Haviv.

Informality is the keynote, as the smiling band leader from Israel sings in six languages, sways over his guitar and beckons customers to the floor (a long, narrow aisle that suffices). The other night, there were four "happy birthday" serenades to various tables.

The colorful, lively music suits the simple, but exotic decor, with a white grotto ceiling and purple fringe lighting. Service is swift and smiling, whether it's drinks, food or both. There is a minimum table charge of $4 a person on Sunday (closed Monday) and Tuesday through Thursday; and $8 on Friday and Saturday. Reservations at David's Harp: 982-0328.

NEW YORK IS A SUMMER FESTIVAL

Art People | Grace Glueck

A Visit to SoHo— Where the Art and The Artists Are Live

A TOUR of SoHo, the bustling neighborhood in downtown Manhattan, is a must for visitors who want a first-hand look at New York's famous art community. Much livelier than the Establishment art scene to be found along upper Madison Avenue, SoHo has live-in artists, low-rise buildings and ground floor or walk-up galleries. The art is not only easier to see (in fact, around any corner, you may meet artists lugging sculptures or canvases to their dealers), the area itself is fun to walk in, presenting an intriguing mix of studios, residences, small factories, restaurants, bars and boutiques, many of them inhabiting 19th-century buildings with elegant cast-iron fronts.

SoHo proper now has about 80 galleries, a number of them cooperatives—i.e., "alternatives" to the commercial galleries, owned and often run by artists themselves. Don't be surprised to find that many of the galleries are closed, however—as on Madison Avenue, art activity in SoHo winds down at this season. Those that stay open in summer are prone to mount group shows, rather than one-man exhibitions. But the group show, providing as it does an instant anthology of the work each dealer represents, is as good a way as any to get an overall impression of current art.

For starters, try the "420" building, a handsomely refurbished cast-iron structure at 420 West Broadway (between Spring and Prince Streets), where there's up-to-the-minute news from the art front in the downtown branches of such well-known dealers as Leo Castelli and Andre Emmerich, and also the independent Sonnabend and John Weber galleries (Emmerich is closed for the summer).

Group shows are in full bloom here, with Castelli (open Monday through Friday, 11 A.M. to 5 P.M.) exposing the work of its trendy stable—among others, a large drawing by the sculptor Richard Serra, construction of wood and cardboard by Frank Stella and a new painting by Kenneth Noland.

In its group exhibition, the John Weber Gallery (open 10 A.M. to 4 P.M. Monday through Friday) includes an early work—a billowing sail—by the gadfly Conceptual artist Hans Haacke, and a brick floor piece by Carl Andre, similar to the enigmatically "simple" one that caused a furor at London's Tate Gallery several months ago. Weber's back room contains a multimedia endeavor, with records, videotapes and so forth, by the far-out Conceptualist group known as "Provisional Art and Language."

And Sonnabend (open Monday through Friday, 11 A.M. to 5 P.M.) is also showing the work of its avant garde stable, including a drawing for an installation by the "body artist," Vito Acconci, drawings by the video artists Charlemagne Palestine and William Wegman and photos by the British "living sculpture" team, Gilbert and George.

Down the street, the building at 383 West Broadway (between Prince and Broome Streets) houses both the O.K. Harris and the Susan Caldwell galleries. O.K. Harris (open Monday through Friday, from noon to 5 P.M.) is staging a summer group invitational of paintings, drawings and sculptures by artists unaffiliated with New York galleries, providing good exposure for artists not too often seen, and a chance to make some real "discoveries" among their works. Among the names are Peter Forakis, David Budd, Julie Gross, Jane Couch, Jim Evanson and Big Jim Jacobs. Upstairs, at Susan Caldwell (open 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. Tuesday through Friday), a one-woman show of handmade paper works by the California artist Nancy Genn shares space with an exhibition of works by gallery regulars, among them Doug Ohlson, David Reed and Jeremy Gilbert-Rolfe.

At 429 West Broadway (between Spring and Prince Streets), the large group show at the Nancy Hoffman Gallery (open Monday through Friday from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M.) showcases gallery artists. The mix is lively: it includes the 76-year old artist-teacher, Jack Tworkov, exhibiting on the New York scene since the 1920's; the West Coast artists Peter Plagens and William Allan; Susan Hall, a figurative painter with a humorous bent, and Fumio Yoshimura, who carves realistic objects, such as typewriters and bicycles, out of wood.

Next door, at No. 431 (between Spring and Prince Streets), the Westbroadway Gallery, a cooperative, is playing host to a group of Canadian artists, the Society of Professional Artists of Quebec. The show contains no less than 128 works by 81 artists, working in the media of painting, tapestry and print. This is the first large representation of contemporary artists from Quebec to be shown here. (The work overflows into a smaller, more intimate show at the Amos Eno Wooster Street, broadway.)

rt: Feast for the Eyes at Museums

HILTON KRAMER

EW YORK is unquestionably the art capital of the nation and, so far as cary art is concerned, ly of the world. But it ot fully function as t the height of the r season, which marks ing of a lull in the of the New York art The museums are course, and crowded eat things to see and many people seeing But by the second f July, the art galleries bring us the bulk new art each season, paring to close down, the third week of any will have locked ors until after Labor there is a lot more at—and worth lookeven in this "off seaeek than any visitor appetite for art could mcompass in a few ust now, I suppose, lar museum event in ork is the show of ya paintings, on femloan from the Prado id, at the Metropoliseum of Art (through These are not to be but neither are the ermanent collections Met. nyone whose special or curiosity is the art of Europe and there is no museum world that offers a mprehensive survey st examples than the of Modern Art (53d between Fifth and venues). This is the see Picasso and Matisse, Miro and Mondrian, Klee and Brancusi and the American abstract expressionists, as well as the classics of photography and industrial design. The museum's sculpture garden, quite apart from the art it contains, is itself one of the most beautiful open-air spaces in New York—even as it is now, with its east end undergoing repairs.

The Guggenheim Museum (Fifth Avenue at 89th Street) is another museum devoted to modern art, and just now (through Oct. 3) the entire building is filled with its permanent collection of European paintings. Less comprehensive than the Modern's, the Guggenheim's collection is nonetheless an important one—Kandinsky and Mondrian are particularly well represented — and the Frank Lloyd Wright building is an experience in itself.

The Whitney Museum of American Art is, as its name suggests, the only New York museum devoted exclusively to art produced in the United States. In honor of the Bicentennial, the Whitney (Madison Avenue at 74th Street) has given over its entire space this summer to exhibiting "200 Years of American Sculpture." Although the show has been the subject of much criticism because of its bizarre installation and some conspicuous omissions, especially among contemporary sculptors, it nonetheless gives us a rough idea of what American sculpture, including folk sculpture, has amounted to. The visitor here has to be prepared, however, for a certain show biz atmosphere not always conducive to esthetic concentration.

For American art — and much else: great African sculpture and a fine Egyptian collection—there is also the Brooklyn Museum (188 Eastern Parkway, near Grand Army Plaza) across the river. The museum's permanent collection of American painting is justly famous, and to it has just been added a spectacular painting, "A Storm in the Rocky Mountains—Mt. Rosalie," measuring 7 by 12 feet, by the nineteenth-century landscapist, Albert Bierstadt. The museum has also brought out a wide-ranging selection of its American watercolor and pastel collection (through Sept. 19) which includes such luminaries as Eakins, Homer, Sargent, Marin, Avery and Rothko.

A different tone is offered in the elegant atmosphere of the Frick Collection (Fifth Avenue at 70th Street), a small museum devoted to the Old Masters. Some of the paintings here—Rembrandt's "Polish Rider," say, or El Greco's "St. Jerome as Cardinal"—are as famous and as sublime as anything at the Met, but the ambience is more intimate (at the Frick, one somehow always feels just a little more in touch with the art) and a little more removed from the clamor of the world outside.

Another such sanctuary is the Pierpont Morgan Library, (Madison Avenue at 36th Street), which is a repository of literary and musical manuscripts as well as a library and art museum. Current offerings include Mozart manuscripts, Persian and Indian miniatures and a historical exhibition entitled "America: From Amerigo Vespucci to the Louisiana Purchase."

For photography buffs, there is the International Center of Photography, Fifth Avenue at 94th Street) which is currently featuring, among other exhibitions, a show of "The Alaska Gold Rush," consisting of prints made from the original glass negatives of E. A. Hegg. For connoisseurs of Far Eastern art and manners—or for anyone, indeed, with an eye for visual refinement carried to the most exquisite extremes—there is the show of Japanese kimonos from the Edo Period (1615-1868) at Japan House (333 East 47th Street) through Sunday.

As for the uptown art galleries there are still a few one-man shows around, and many more end of the season surveys. Today (July 9) is the last day to see the much talked about show of Andy Warhol's and James Wyeth's Portraits of Each Other at the Coe Kerr Gallery, 49 East 82nd Streets, and also the last day to see the sculpture and drawings of Leonard Baskin at the Kennedy Galleries, 40 West 57th Street. For another week (through July 16), Red Grooms's great "Ruckus Manhattan" — the vast and vastly funny satirical takeoff on life in New York—remains at the Marlborough Gallery, also at 40 West 57th Street.

On the same block, there is a moderately amusing show satirizing Bicentennial pieties at the Frumkin Gallery, 50 West 57th Street, and a very different show—of serious art on a small scale by new and mostly younger talent—at the Kornblee Gallery, 20 West 57th Street.

Across the street, at 29 West 57th Street, there is a surprising one-man show by an established artist, Paul Georges, who is exhibiting pictures on political themes of the 1960's (Kent State, political assassination, ecology —all freely interpreted) at the Fischbach Gallery (through July 30).

Elsewhere one can see two of the great names of modern European painting—Giorgio de Chirico and Emil Nolde—represented, respectively, at the Wildenstein Galleries, 19 East 64th Street (through July 30) and the Sabarsky Gallery, 987 Madison Avenue at 77th Street (through July 31), though it must be said that the de Chirico show, containing the artist's later work, does not do him justice.

Examples of color-field abstraction can be seen at Knoedler's, 19 East 79th Street, and of contemporary realist drawings by American artists at the Schoelkopf Gallery, 825 Madison Avenue at 69th Street. French and American impressionist painting is on view at Hirschl and Adler, 21 East 67th Street, and a selection of New Yorker cartoons, covers and illustrations at the Nicholls Gallery, 1014 Madison Avenue at 78th Street.

One of the most unusual of the current exhibitions is "The Cuzco Circle," at the Center for Inter-American Relations, 680 Park Avenue at 68th Street, a survey of 17th and 18th century Peruvian painting in which the rococo conventions of European paintings are dramatically invested with the iconography, local color and primitive religosity of Peruvian colonials. Some of the results are quite sensational, and like nothing else to be seen in or out of the museums on the current art scene.

The Pop Life | John Rockwell

NEW YORK may share with Los Angeles the title of capital of the music business when it comes to corporate head offices and recording studios. But for live entertainment, this is still the center of the pop-music world, and one hopes that conventiongoers in town this week will find time to partake of it.

The scene is so active in the metropolitan New York area that wide varieties of music styles generate here out of the sheer numbers of night spots that cater to different sorts of entertainment. For example, Latin music in its current guise, salsa, is based here, with the Corso, at 205 East 86th Street, near Third Avenue (534-4964), the unquestioned center of that scene. And New York's discos have spawned a form of updated soul music that continually challenges older forms of rock for supremacy on the national pop charts. The underground New York rock circuit, with its neo-50's street-punk images and deliberately simple music, has produced several bands, chief among them Patti Smith and her trio.

The main spot for rock concerts this summer, as in the past, is the Wollman Skating Rink Theater in the southeast corner of Central Park, a 6,000-seat facility where the Schaefer Brewing Company subsidizes a low-cost concert series (tickets are $3 and $1.50) of leading names in pop music.

The Schaefer lineup this weekend is particularly strong, and that for next week is lively, too. Tonight Miss Smith, the unchallenged queen of New York punk-art rock, makes her first festival appearance, followed tomorrow night by Lauro Nyro, the unchallenged queen of New York's urban singer-song writers. On Monday, B. B. King, the best-known of all the electric blues veterans, headlines a bill with Wet Willie, a Southern rock band; on Wednesday there is a jazz bill with Stanley Turrentine, the saxophonist, and Freddie Hubbard, the trumpeter; next Friday there are Toots and the Maytals, the wonderfully soulful reggae band, and next Saturday, Earl Scruggs will be on hand with his popularly oriented bluegrass. Festival tickets are available at Korvettes stores.

The largest regularly used spot for rock in the New York area is Roosevelt Stadium in Jersey City, which can contain 45,000 fans. Tomorrow the headliner is Kiss, the clown-devil-costumed heavy-metal smoke-bombers, preceded by the J. Geils Band, those Boston rhythm-and-blues specialists, and Bob Seger, Detroit's own favorite rocker.

Nassau Coliseum, a basketball and hockey arena in Uniondale, L.I., is the second most popular large indoor venue for rock in the area. (The first is Madison Square Garden, but it is being used for other purposes.) On Thursday, Nassau will offer a soul-disco bill headlined by Earth, Wind and Fire. Tickets through Ticketron.

The leading rock club in the city is undoubtedly the Bottom Line, 15 West Fourth Street, near Mercer Street (228-6300), and that club's owners are continuing their innovative program policy by offering a week of activities geared specifically to the convention. The headliner every night, tonight through next Friday, will be a well-known folk singer or group (Kenny Rankin this weekend, the Deadly Nightshade on Monday, Eric Andersen on Tuesday, Livingston Taylor on Wednesday, Mary Travers on Thursday and Tom Paxton next Friday, with Novella Nelson coming in next Saturday). Opening each night from tonight through next Saturday will be a shifting group of improvisatory comedians, who will comment in their own way on the political events of each day.

None of the city's other clubs is offering anything quite that ambitious, but there is still plenty of good music to be heard. The Other End, 149 Bleecker Street at La Guardia Place (673-7030), smaller than the Bottom Line and the city's second most notable showcase, will offer the Good Old Boys and the Rowan Brothers tonight and tomorrow, with Michael Federal replacing the Rowans on Sunday and Monday.

CBGB's, at 315 Bowery (473-9763), is the city's flagship for underground rock and will be offering varied, lesser-known rock bands during the week. The Shirts are on hand tonight and tomorrow, with Stuart's Hammer coming in Sunday, and next Thursday through Saturday the headliner is Orchestra Luna. Other centers for rock of this sort are Max's Kansas City, 212 Park Avenue South, at 16th Street (777-7870), and Club 82, 82 East Fourth Street (GR 7-1046).

Some dance spots, such as the Corso, offer live music, but most of New York's teeming discos stick to disks. The variety is ceaseless, and tastes and trends shift from week to week. Of the nonmembership midtown and uptown discos, some of the currently best known or most elegant are Regine's, 502 Park Avenue at 59th Street (826-0990), Hippopotamus, 405 East 62d Street (486-1566), the Stargate Ballroom, Lexington Avenue and 85th Street (RH 4-4963), and Wednesday's, 210 East 86th Street (535-8500).

Patti Smith's concert tonight at the Schaefer Festival will be her last before she goes into the studio next week to record her crucial second album. The producer this time will be Jack Douglas, best known for his work with Aerosmith, although Miss Smith assures us that he is intensely sympathetic with her work and much involved with jazz and improvisation.

Patti Smith: At the Schaefer festival tonight

The disk's title will be "Radio Ethiopia," from a song by Miss Smith and Lenny Kaye of her band. All of the music will be by Miss Smith and band members, and most of it has been written in the last year. "We've been practicing 12 hours a day," Miss Smith says. "It's really gonna be a cool record."

Miss Smith's achievement has been to blend her own entirely personal art with punk-rock tradition. But in interviews lately she has appeared to be stressing her rock roots at the expense of her debts to poets, painters and others in the SoHo arts community. She concedes the imbalance.

"A lot of people who come to interview us are snobbish and self-satisfied and want to put down kids," she says. "I've been an artist as long as I've been a fan of rock-and-roll. They're very equated inside me. I don't feel any snobbishness about a DeKooning painting versus a Rolling Stones record.

"I really feel that rock-and-roll is a still-untapped form, the only art in America that our generation has created, the most major art since Abstract Expressionism."

'Mr. Hi-De-Ho' Steals the Show At Big Benefit

Sammy Davis Jr. was the star attraction at Wednesday's benefit concert for the Harlem-Dowling Children's Service, and he drew a guttering array of his fellow performers to the event, at Carnegie Hall. One of them, Cab Calloway, opened the show and simply walked away with it.

Mr. Calloway, the man who sang "hi-de-ho" and conducted his orchestra of the 1930's like a ballet dancer having a nervous breakdown, won over the audience the minute he bounded onto the stage. His performances of "Stormy Weather" and "Minnie The Moocher" were full of good-natured scat singing and vocal banter. With George Rhodes's orchestra providing apt backing, Mr. Calloway effortlessly recreated the atmosphere of the Harlem night spots of the depression years. He brought his daughter Lael out for several pleasant performances, but she was totally overshadowed by her father's superb timing and surprisingly robust dancing.

Billy Eckstine presented a disappointingly shallow club act, full of improbable material, and crammed "Prisoner of Love," "Caravan," and the other standards for which his voice is so well suited into a half-hearted medley. Sammy Davis Jr. also leaned heavily on the medley idea. There was a Sinatra medley, of course, and a Beatles medley that turned several songs from "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" into overwrought melodrama.

When Mr. Davis focused his singing, acting and dancing talents on a single piece of material, as in his stagey version of "Mr. Bojangles," he succeeded admirably. But throughout most of his act he leaped gingerly from song to song and from idiom to idiom, without attaining much depth beyond his commitment to putting on an entertaining show. When, halfway through his performance, he brought out Vivian Reed of Broadway's "Bubbling Brown Sugar," the contrast was striking. Miss Reed sang a single number, Billie Holiday's "God Bless The Child," but she invested it with enough intensity to make one forget almost everything that Mr. Davis had done.

Miss Reed was wise to limit herself to one song. Mr. Davis continued, even though he had been upstaged before he began—by Mr. Calloway's magnificent performance.

Bridge: Most Players Now Follow Vanderbilt's Bidding Advice

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

The worldwide trend in bidding systems in the last six years must be very entertaining to the ghost of Harold Vanderbilt, the inventor of contract bridge.

Almost half a century ago he recommended the use of an artificial one-club bid to show strong hands, but the authorities on the game and the public at large paid no attention whatever. But nowadays most of the world's top players follow his advice.

By far the most popular of the many strong-club systems is Precision, which has gained thousands of adherents throughout the world in the six years since Vanderbilt's death. One of the reasons for the success of Precision has been the ready availability of books about the system. The latest is an interesting monograph entitled "Bidding Precisely, Volume 2," published by the Monna Lisa Precision Corporation, 277 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017; $4.95 paperbound.

3 Openings Described

The inventor of the system, Charles Wei, and his co-author, Ron Andersen, give their attention to the three basic limited openings, one diamond, one heart and one spade. Their suggestions in this area will be of great value, not only to Precision players, but also to other strong-club adherents and to a lesser extent to standard bidders.

One of the ideas the authors develop deserves consideration by any serious partnership. If an opponent over-calls a suit opening with another suit, they recommend that a simple suit-bid should be nonforcing. Hands too strong for a nonforcing bid are handled by making a negative double and then bidding a suit, a sequence that obviously becomes forcing.

The authors had a major success with this treatment on the diagramed deal described in the book. At most tables in a regional pair championship, North opened with one heart and East jumped pre-emptively to two spades. This silenced nearly every South, since three diamonds would be forcing and would overstate the hand.

West's jump to four spades then ended the auction, and East-West scored a vulnerable game unless South shut his eyes and gambled with five diamonds. Four spades could have been beaten by a trump lead, but few South players looked further than the diamond king.

Using a new-suit bid as nonforcing, Wei was able to bid three diamonds over two spades. He was eventually doubled in five diamonds when his partner continued to that contract over four spades.

Feeble defense allowed five diamonds doubled to come home. West led a spade, and East won and continued the suit. Now Wei was able to ruff and lead a club. West ducked, and when the king won in dummy, the suit was continued.

West won with the queen and played another spade. South ruffed, and ruffed a club to reach this position:

NORTH
◇ A4

WEST
♡ K9654

♠ J74
◇ 753

♡ J10
♣ 10

The defense had been helpful, but there were still problems. Entering the closed hand with a trump lead to ruff a club would leave the declarer stuck in the dummy. The same move in order to play a heart honor would be no better if it occurred to West to cover with his king. So Wei led out four rounds of trumps, squeezing West in hearts and clubs to make his doubled game.

The defense had many ways to do better. One was to lead trumps early, and another was to lead hearts and threaten a ruff. But a one-trick defeat would still have been a triumph for the bidding style that permitted South to bid his diamonds.

Topographically, the city placed Bohemians in the midst of the poor, the immigrants and ethnics; Washington Square Park was once the buffer zone between the old New York families holding on to their houses on the north and the Bohemians living in the cheap rooming-houses along the south side, in the 10's and 20's.

"Literary New York" charts these restless currents, the ebbs and flows and whirlpools over the the city's face through the years. The authors tell who lived where for how long, what they wrote and who came to the parties. If you want to see the "Paradise Alley" Jack Kerouac wrote about in "The Subterranean" (which he transplanted—voguishly?—to San Francisco): where E. Golman had her crash pad for radical transients; where LeRoi Jones (as he then was) had a fight with the poet Frank O'Hara, then went on a TV panel show to denounce all white men; where O. Henry drank himself into death by cirrhosis, the efficient authors have the answers.

The book is, however, more compilatory than animated by interpretive ideas about the impact of the city on our literature, yet the detail has a quietly thrilling cumulative effect. It is a lovingly conserving work, drawing together in one place the city's hop-scotching literary life, and it makes the reader care about the mad poets and writer-businessmen who have stalked and strolled these streets, taking what they needed from its life, as though from a great free buffet, and giving it form and content. Many of them cursed it, like Melville in his mad, bleak "Pierre"; others, like Thomas Wolfe, found it "the most homesick city in the world." But to all it belonged as a literary birthright that goes with being American—"this city, this mischievous and marvelous monument which not to look on would be like death," as E. B. White (a celebrator) wrote.

Many of the writers' domiciles mentioned in "Literary New York" are gone, of course, but a surprising number remain, even if they are only a shadow of their former selves. The book provides excellent maps showing you how to find them.

Greenwich Village is the locus of a lot of the still-standing habitats, and Edward T. Delaney's and Charles Lockwood's "Greenwich Village" provides pictures of them, and many other landmarks, along with a brief historical text. The photographs, by George Roos, show No. 7 Washington Square North, where Edith Wharton lived; No. 14 West 10th, where Mark Twain held court in his billiard room, and Patchin Place, where Theodore Dreiser and John Reed sojourned and E. C. Cummings reigned. There is much more in the book on the Village as it is today, and it is a useful and much needed guide for tourists and natives who can never find Chumley's, the restaurant without a sign.

A Follower Becomes a Leader

Whither Thou Goest. By Eleanor Dienstag. 187 pages. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $7.95.

More and more, marriage — at least among the educated urban middle class — is taking on the lineaments of a struggle for identity between the parties, most spectacularly among consciousness-raised women whose burgeoning sense of unfairness leads them to upset a comfortable male-centered equilibrium. The ripples of anxieties this has sent out through the society may account for the popularity of books such as "The Total Woman," which offer a sort of escape-from-freedom prescription calling on the wife simply to submit to the husband.

In "Whither Thou Goest" Eleanor Dienstag tells the true story of what happened to her marriage when she agreed, against her inclinations, to a move to Rochester, N.Y., so that her husband, Jerry, could take a glittering job with a hot new corporation called Homex.

Homex was going to mass-produce modular housing and its stock was a glamour issue. For Jerry, a securities lawyer, fed up with the Manhattan paper chase this was the big brass ring on the career merry-go-round, a chance to put down roots out of the city. But to Eleanor it smelled of suburban exile; her roots and her literary ambitions were in New York.

Once in Rochester, however, she modestly blossomed, becoming "superwife" and mother, as well as writing for suburban papers. Jerry, however, found that Homex was a shell game, a corporation engaged in making houses that nobody would buy.

He became withdrawn, committing to the marriage only his paycheck. His ultimate assertion of his integrity against the company, her realization that the superwife game was really a low blow of revenge, bring the story to a resolution, their marriage to a truce, albeit a temporary one.

TV WEEKEND

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

On the eve of the Democratic convention, the television schedule is understandably heavy with politics — interviews with former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, the Democrats' most likely nominee, speculation on his choice for Vice President, a nostalgic look at past conventions and previews of this week's activities. Elsewhere, the programming assortment runs to a typical mix of sports, specials and reruns.

Friday

At 8 P.M., CBS News leaves the domestic political scene for an hour with a special report on "Italy, Lebanon and South Africa." According to Leslie Midgley, executive producer, the program will explore three questions: Is South Africa in the early stages of a race war? Is anyone on our side in Lebanon? Can our alliance with Italy endure? The anchorman in New York will be Charles Collingwood.

At 9, public-TV's "USA: People and Politics," a series constructed around election-year subjects, moves from Mondays to Fridays on the Public Broadcasting Service. The hour-long program this evening will be an examination of Mr. Carter's search for a Vice-Presidential running mate. It will focus on three possible candidates: Senator Frank Church of Idaho, Senator John H. Glenn Jr. of Ohio, and Gov. Wendell Anderson of Minnesota.

Saturday

At 1:30 P.M., "What's It All About?," CBS News's series for young viewers, offers a guide to the conventions and the processes by which Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates are chosen. Walter Cronkite is the narrator. Immediately following, at 2 o'clock, Channel 2 takes a nostalgic look at the last Democratic convention that was held in New York. The year was 1924, and the 16-day, 103-ballot convention turned out to be the longest in American history. Jim Jensen is the narrator.

The sports picture gets serious at 3:30 on CBS with a new $150,000 competition called the "Pepsi Grand Slam of Tennis." Originating in Myrtle Beach, S.C., the tournament will star the "Big 4" male winners on the current scene: Bjorn Borg, the new Wimbledon champion, Arthur Ashe, Manuel Orantes and Ilie Nastase. Today's semi-finals will be taped "highlights." The winner of Sunday's finals, to be carried live at 3:30, will get $75,000.

At 4:30, CBS's "Sports Spectacular" will include a 10-round boxing match between Larry Middleton and Ken Norton, the Number 1 contender for Muhammad Ali's heavyweight title. The bout will be broadcast live from San Diego. Also at 4:30, ABC-TV will carry a taped presentation of the final round in the British Open — the world's oldest golf tournament. The 105th go-around will be taped earlier in the day at the Royal Birkdale Golf Club in Southport, England.

Later in the evening, for a sharp change of pace, CBS is pre-empting "The Carol Burnett Show" rerun to bring the "Miss Universe Pageant" live from Hong Kong at 10 P.M. Bob Barker and Helen O'Connell are the hosts for the beauty contest, which is celebrating its silver anniversary.

Sunday

Mid-afternoon is news-panel time. At 11:30, on CBS's "Face the Nation," Yitzhak Rabin, Prime Minister of Israel, will be interviewed by satellite from Tel Aviv. At 12:30, NBC's "Meet the Press" expands to an hour-long interview with Jimmy Carter. And at 1:30, ABC's "Issues and Answers" features a panel of prominent Democrats: Senator George McGovern of South Dakota, Representative Barbara Jordan of Texas and Gov. Wendell Anderson of Minnesota.

On the eve of the opening of the Democratic convention on Monday, all three commercial networks will be presenting hour-long previews of the event — interviews with key political figures and behind-the-scenes glimpses of the electronic logistics devised for televising it. CBS's and ABC's previews are running against each other at 7; NBC's can be seen at 10.

Also at 10 o'clock, CBS is offering an hour-long digest version of its July 4 Bicentennial marathon coverage.

Meanwhile, on public television, reruns of last spring's 13 episodes of "Upstairs, Downstairs" will begin at 7 P.M. And at 11:30 P.M., Channel 13's Video and Television Review (VTR) has a half-hour called "Probably the World's Smallest TV Station."

The program will contain excerpts from the work of a group called Media Bus (formerly Videofreex). The material was broadcast on Lanesville TV, which is situated somewhere in the Catskill Mountains. Every Saturday, the group broadcasts to the local citizenry, giving viewers an opportunity to phone in comments or even join the proceedings at its small studio.

"Commitment"

A journey of rediscovery...

Attend a Bar Mitzvah at the Western Wall in Jerusalem. See a New York couple reunited in Israel with relatives from the Soviet Union. Accompany an old-time Yiddish actor to a class at Queens College where he learns that Yiddish is not yet dead. Follow a thousand young Jews on their mission of renewal in the Jewish State.

Join narrator Theodore Bikel on this unusual journey to a new sense of identity for the Jews of New York. Filmed in Israel and New York.

Today at 2:25 p.m., WNEW-TV, Channel 5

Presented by the United Jewish Appeal-Federation of Jewish Philanthropies Joint Campaign.
A film by Amram Nowak and Paul Kresh. Produced by Amram Nowak Associates

The Ballet: Showpiece

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

AGNES DE MILLE and Antony Tudor worked and studied together in London in the 1930's. On Wednesday night, both choreographers were represented on American Ballet Theater's program at the New York State Theater along with the pas de deux from "Le Corsaire."

This showpiece was danced with true virtuosity and polished technique by Eleanor D'Antuono and Ted Kivitt. Their variations and the coda were especially exciting. The pas de deux was framed first by Miss de Mille's 1941 "Three Virgins and a Devil" (which grew out of the London period) and then by "The Leaves Are Fading," Mr. Tudor's ballet of last year.

"Three Virgins and a Devil" is true comedy, a rollicking mock morality play. The whiff of a plot is based on a scenario by the late Ramon Reed, a friend of Miss de Mille, but the comic timing, theatrcal pacing and sharply drawn characterization are pure de Mille.

This is one of Miss de Mille's least classically styled ballets. No specific idiom s used; realistic gesture, conventional mime, Charleston steps, walking, modern-dance falls and ballet steps are all combined very naturally to tell a story that is an anecdote, but also makes a philosophical point: We all have our weaknesses, despite our pretensions to vrtue.

Dennis Nahat, as the Devil who uses a cello as a pogo stick and tantrums to get his way, is magnificently absurd, outrageously funny in his acting and dancing. The three virgins who are tricked by him were led by a hilarious Sallie Wilson, ably supported by Ruth Mayer and Hilda Morales. William Carter offered a groovy touch to the Devil's helper.

"The Leaves Are Fading" is in a totally different key —a dramatic reverie on love. It is a ballet that looks even lovelier on repeated viewing. It is also a ballet that gves a large number of soloists a chance to dance, and they were all fine.

Gelsey Kirkland and Ivan Nagy were the leading couple, but it is everybody who matters in this case. The structure of the ballet is very clear—the mood progresses from playfulness and camaraderie to love duets that suggest maturity. Yo t can just see the leaves fading at the end. Almost.

IN DANCE FESTIVAL

ican Dance Festival is a nd venerable institution n Bennington, Vt., in 1934 n at Connecticut College lon since 1947. It is under nd tonight and tomorrow he performers are the 14 members of the Metropolitan Opera Ballet Ensemble, which usually works out of the opera house in Lincoln Center. This will be a performance with something for almost everyone. They will do Vesak's "Variations" from "Die Fledermaus" and Bob Fosse's "Rich Man's Fugue" from "Sweet Charity," among other things. Admission: $4, $5, $6. Also, the company will do a 2:30 P.M. demonstration tomorrow showing how dance is used in operatic repertory; admission, $3. Information: (203) 442-9131. Can be reached by train from Grand Central Terminal or by bus and car (Route 95 to Exit 83, into Route 32 and follow signs).

JAPANESE FILM

Japan House, near the United Nations, at 333 East 47th Street (832-1155), is a handsome spacious building, with a pond and Japanese décor on the ground floor, and is worth a visit just to look at. However, today at 7:30 P.M., in its comfortable downstairs auditorium, it is presenting a 1952 film, "Mother," directed by Mikio Naruse, who has been credited with a sensitivity for the woman's dilemma in his country. With English subtitles. Admission: $2.50.

Saturday

ROOSEVELT LIVED HERE

In 1867, the father of Franklin Delano Roosevelt bought a large 1826 house at Hyde Park, N.Y., six miles from Poughkeepsie. The President was born and raised there, and he and his family lived there until his death. It is now run by the National Parks Service, and you can visit the home every day from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. You will see Roosevelt's clothes still hanging in the closet, his slippers under the bed and antiques the family collected. A 50-cent combination ticket gets you into the house and also into the nearby 64-room Vanderbilt Mansion, just north of Hyde Park (under-16's, free). For another 50 cents (under-16's free), you can visit, on the Hyde Park site, the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library-Museum, with its memorabilia, model cars and model ships; also the new wing honoring Eleanor Roosevelt. Information: (914) 229-9115. Easy to reach by car; also buses and trains to Poughkeepsie, then taxi.

SHOW BIZ

Two of the more unusual places in town, where you can see careers in the making—or in the breaking—are the Improvisation, 358 West 44th Street, near Ninth Avenue, and Catch a Rising Star, 1487 First Avenue, near 77th Street (794-1906). The specialty of each house is new talent, singers and comics, mostly aspiring, although sometimes there are return visits by distinguished alumni who try out new material. Their atmosphere is informal and congenial. The Improv has a West Side inelegance that is matched by Catch's often nicely turned-out East Side customers. The performances are a grab bag, some good, much so-so and worse, but occasionally, a great one. At Improv, shows start Friday and Saturday at 9 P.M. with a $5 minimum in liquor (plus $2 cover on Saturday); other nights, including Sunday, $3.50 liquor minimum. Food available, too.

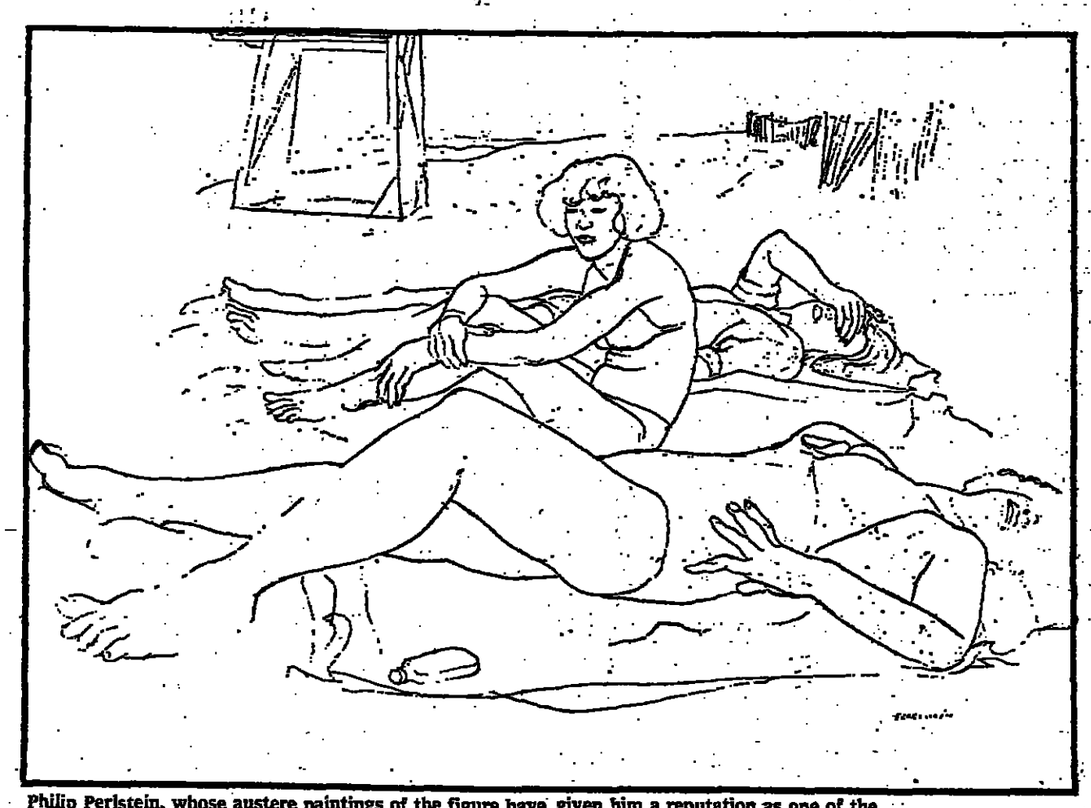
At Catch, Friday and Saturday night shows at 9:30 and 12:30. Weekend reservations should be made a day in advance (phones answered from 6 P.M. on, Friday and Saturday; 7:30 other days, when show starts 10 P.M.). Friday and Saturday, two-drink minimum plus $3 cover; other days, same, but with $2 cover.

STAGE AT TRINITY

Trinity Church, at Wall Street and Broadway, once towered over the city. George Washington and other dignitaries worshiped here. The church is more than a relic of history, however. It is very much alive and has for many years sponsored programs for visitors and workers in lower Manhattan. This month on Saturdays at 2 P.M. (as well as Tuesdays at 1 and Wednesdays at 5 P.M.), the church is the stage for a musical presentation called "The American Dream" by Larry King, Trinity's organist and musical director. For this piece he plays the 9,000-pipe organ and is accompanied by percussion instruments, with quadraphonic playback of prerecorded sound. It's the same place that heard the American premiere of Handel's "Messiah" in 1770.

BROOKLYN TOUR

Lou Singer specializes in taking tourists around the big borough that was once its own great city. His tours run for several hours and go through the many neighborhoods that have probably as many buildings with a past as Manhattan has—maybe more. Mr. Singer, who started this as an avocation, now makes it something of a vocation. He has also begun picking visitors up in Manhattan rather than making them find their way to his terra, which is often incognita to outsiders. On Saturdays and Wednesdays, you can join him at 10 A.M. at Second Avenue and 41st Street. Cost is $7 a reservation. Information: 875-9084, between 5 and 10 P.M.



Philip Perlstein, whose austere paintings of the figure have given him a reputation as one of the country's foremost realists, found these subjects on a New York City beach.

Sunday

KATONAH ARTS

In Westchester, the Katonah Gallery, 28 Bedford Road, Katonah, is sponsoring an unusual tour of museums and places full of history Sunday. A bus will leave the gallery, every half-hour between 1 and 5 P.M., and drive up Route 22 in Bedford. You can get off at the John Jay Homestead, or at Bedford Village (Historic Hall, the Stone School House and the Court House and Museum). Stay at each place as long as you wish. At the gallery itself, from noon to 5:30, there are films, slide shows and exhibits summing up 300 years of American culture and history; admission $1. John Jay Homestead is free, including tour. Bedford Village Historical Hall is free, but the Court House and Museum and 1829 Stone School House charge 75 cents; 25 cents for youngsters. Trains to Katonah from Grand Central Terminal every two hours from 9:15 A.M. (half-fare Sundays). The gallery, on Bedford Road, Route 117, is only one block away. Information: (914)232-4988.

HALL OF FAME

On University Heights in the West Bronx, overlooking the Harlem River and Manhattan, is the Hall of Fame, a round structure with openings in which sit busts of 95 famous Americans (room for 102; you must be famous, American and have been dead for at least 25 years to get a space here), among them Franklin D. Roosevelt, Stephen Foster, Lilian Wald, George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and the composer Edward MacDowell. It's on the campus of what was New York University and now is Bronx Community College, at University Avenue and West 181st Street (IRT Jerome Avenue line to Burnside Avenue). For four Sundays, through Aug. 1, you can not only see these tributes to the famous in this quiet setting but also be serenaded by strolling folk singers, starting at 2 P.M. Sunday. Jan and Kathleen Oosting, in costume, sing and play guitar, banjo, autoharp, bowed psaltry, dulcimer and pennywhistle. Admission here is always free.

THE BALLROOM

The ballroom, 458 West Broadway, just south of Houston Street (473-9367) is a modest-size SoHo restaurant that has gained the admiration of artists, theater people and other knowns and unknowns. It has a space in which there is live entertainment by one or two performers almost every night except Sunday, until now, when there is a guest performer every Sunday at 9:30 P.M. Sunday night, the star is Neva Small, singer and actress (currently featured in "Something's Afoot"; her credits include the movie role as one of Tevya's daughters in "Fiddler on the Roof"). Miss Small and Schott Kuney, who plays guitar for the New York Philharmonic and is in the orchestra of "Shenandoah," will be at the Ballroom through July 31, but have only this one Sunday appearance (otherwise, they appear Mondays through Saturdays). There is a $2.50 cover at showtime. Entrees run from $3.50 to $7.50.

EARLY CYCLE

This is for early risers. At 2:30 A.M. —that is Sunday morning —there will be an explorer's bicycle ride from the Hotel Plaza to Battery Park, reaching the tip at about 6 A.M. or so to see the sun rise out of Brooklyn. The project, sponsored by the Friends of the Parks, has in the past drawn hundreds of early birds. Usually an architectural historian rides shotgun, pointing out interesting buildings, parks, anything on the route, which is not straight southward but tacks back and forth crosstown. Bring your own breakfast. Admission: $1. If it rains, ride next Sunday, same time, same place. Information: UN 1-9696, 879-0740. No reservations needed.

HISPANIC CULTURE

Of all the ethnic arts in New York City, none are growing faster than the arts in the Spanish-speaking sector. Hispanic New Yorkers come from Puerto Rico, Cuba, Colombia, the Dominican Republic and from every country that has Castilian as its mother tongue. Sunday from 11 A.M. to 6 P.M. at the fountain plaza in Lincoln Center, Broadway and 63d Street, you can take in the Hispanic Arts Festival, an outdoor sample of music, theater, dance and other aspects of culture. Nuestro Theatro will present a children's play (about 11:50); the Spanish Repertory Theater will do a Cervantes play (1:15); at 12:30, Intar with Afro-Caribbean music; at 3:15, the Puerto Rican Dance Theater, followed by the Puerto Rican Traveling Theater, doing "Pipo Subway No Sabe Reir," and, finally, at 4:45 P.M., Tito Puente and his orchestra. All free. Information: 369-7054.

JEWISH TOURS

New York has the largest Jewish population of any city in the world, including those in Israel. The American Jewish Congress runs Tours of Jewish New York on Sundays and Wednesdays that take you to Orthodox and Hasidic areas of Brooklyn, to pickle works on the Lower East Side, to Temple Emanu-El on Fifth Avenue, with a number of waystops in between. The bus leaves from Fifth Avenue and 41st Street (the big New York Public Library) at 9 A.M. and gets you back between 4:30 and 5. There is a lunch stop, suitably ethnic, and you buy your own. Otherwise, tour costs $15.50 a person (less in groups). Information: 628-2244.

Around a Garden Called Madison Sq.

the turn of the century, the neighborhood was becoming a center of theaters, elegant hotels and great stores. West of them, loft buildings began to replace the slums, and garment factories moved in. By World War I, the modern character of the neighborhood had been established, and though the theaters moved north to Times Square and the elegant people to Fifth Avenue and the East Side, and though many new buildings have been erected, what remains, basically, is what has been here for 60 years.

Shopping

There are few material wants that cannot be satisfied in the stores, large and small, that are clustered in and around Herald Square. This major intersection, where Broadway slices through the neighborhood, is the site of Macy's, which bills itself as "the world's largest store," and its great rival, Gimbels. Together with Korvette's, which stands between them, and Ohrbach's, farther east on 34th Street, they cater to the middle mass of the city's population. Though all carry quite expensive goods, they base their appeal principally on their ability to offer quality and style at relatively low price.

Shoppers could easily spend a day exploring fully just one of these great emporiums, but they should not ignore the smaller shops. On 32d Street, between Seventh Avenue and the Avenue of the Americas, for example, is a collection of camera stores that can serve all the needs of amateurs, would-be professionals and professional photographers. And between the same avenues, one block north, is the Penn Arcade, a narrow passage running from 33d to 34th Street, that is lined with shops offering flowers, cosmetics, bridal headgear, shoes, dresses, health foods, jewelry, vegetables and fruits.

Farther along 34th Street, at the corner of Fifth Avenue, is one of the city's handsomest stores, B. Altman & Co. It covers a whole city block with a severe, limestone structure, and its main floor, parquet paved and illuminated with crystal chandeliers, comes closest to what old New York regarded as elegance in retailing. Luncheon at Altman's Charleston Garden restaurant, which offers rich desserts, is a reward many city children earn by shopping without complaint with their parents.

Landmarks

The great building of this neighborhood is conspicuous by its absence. It is Pennsylvania Station, whose two-block-long facade of Doric columns, completed in 1910 by the distinguished architectural firm of McKim, Mead & White, made a monumental statement about the importance of railroads to the city. The station was destroyed in 1963 to make way for the new Madison Square Garden and its adjoining, 29-story office tower.

Many city residents still shed tears over the loss of this building, and some still remember The New Yorker's wry, cartoon comment on its demolition: a truck driver pulling into a city dump with a load of broken columns and asking the attendant, "Where do you want Penn Station?"

Neoclassical echoes of the station's presence remain in the two major buildings that face it across Seventh and Eighth Avenues. To the east is the Statler-Hilton Hotel (formerly the Pennsylvania Hotel), with an imposing, three-story-high portico of six Ionic columns.

To the west is the General Post Office, another McKim, Mead & White building of the same period. Twenty massive Corinthian columns, set upon a broad flight of 26 steps, march across its facade, and cut into stone above them is what may be the longest building inscription in the world, attributed to Herodotus:

"Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds."

Still another relic of McKim, Mead & White's work is in Herald Square, just opposite Macy's. It is the clock and statuary group—Minerva and two attendants, nicknamed Stuff and Guff—that once stood atop the New York Herald Building. The building was demolished in 1921, but the name of the great newspaper it housed is perpetuated by the square (actually a small triangle).

To the south is another triangular island completely surrounded by coursing traffic. It is Greeley Square, graced by the seated presence of Horace Greeley, founder of The New York Tribune, now, like The Herald it was united with for many years, defunct.

The Empire State Building, at Fifth Avenue and 34th Street, is the quintessential symbol of New York. Completed in 1931 at the start of the Depression, it was largely vacant during its early years. But though its commercial success was delayed until the 1940's, it instantly became a major attraction for tourists.

Garment Center

New York's most important industry is the making of women's clothes, and business is both better and worse than it used to be. It is better because the native designers who work on Seventh Avenue are now among the most influential in the world. They don't have to look to Paris or Rome for inspiration, and their ability to create fashion has strengthened New York's hold on the industry.

It is worse, however, because the actual making of garments has been moving out of New York for decades. Cheaper labor available in the South, the West and overseas, the inefficiencies of operating in narrow, multistory loft buildings, and traffic congestion in the section's narrow streets, with trucks jockeying for curbside space, all make it less expensive to manufacture somewhere else.

Nevertheless, the section, which runs from Fifth to Eighth Avenues, 30th to 39th Streets, retains a vitality few other parts of the city have.

One building, like 530 Seventh Avenue, at the corner of 39th Street, can house enough important businesses to support the population of a small city. In this one are Adele Simpson, Chester Weinberg, Diane von Furstenberg, Estevez, Jerry Silverman, Mollie Parnis, Leo Narducci, Abe Schrader and Malcolm Starr, names that appear on the labels of garments worn in every part of America.

The best time to visit is at noon on a fine day, when thousands of workers gather on the street to gossip as they digest their hastily downed lunches. The workers used to be Jewish and Italian; now many of them are black and Puerto Rican, but the garment center jokes they exchange still have the bite of bitterness. (Ask a New York friend to tell you the classic one about the man who shouts "cut velvet" as he jumps out a window.)

Eating

Here are a few suggestions for dining in the neighborhood: Keen's English Chop House, 72 West 36th Street (WI 7-3636) which has been serving up fine mutton chops and other British fare since 1878.

Dubrow's cafeteria, 515 Seventh Avenue near 37th Street, a garment center landmark, where the seemingly limitless choices include a wide selection of Jewish specialties, among them cheese blintzes and sour cream.

Chock Full O' Nuts, one of the best of the fast-food chains, has one of its original, circa 1930's, restaurants at the corner of 34th Street and Seventh Avenue. Here may be had the chain's original sandwich—cream cheese on nut and raisin bread—its doughnuts and its pies as well as more elaborate sandwiches and soups.

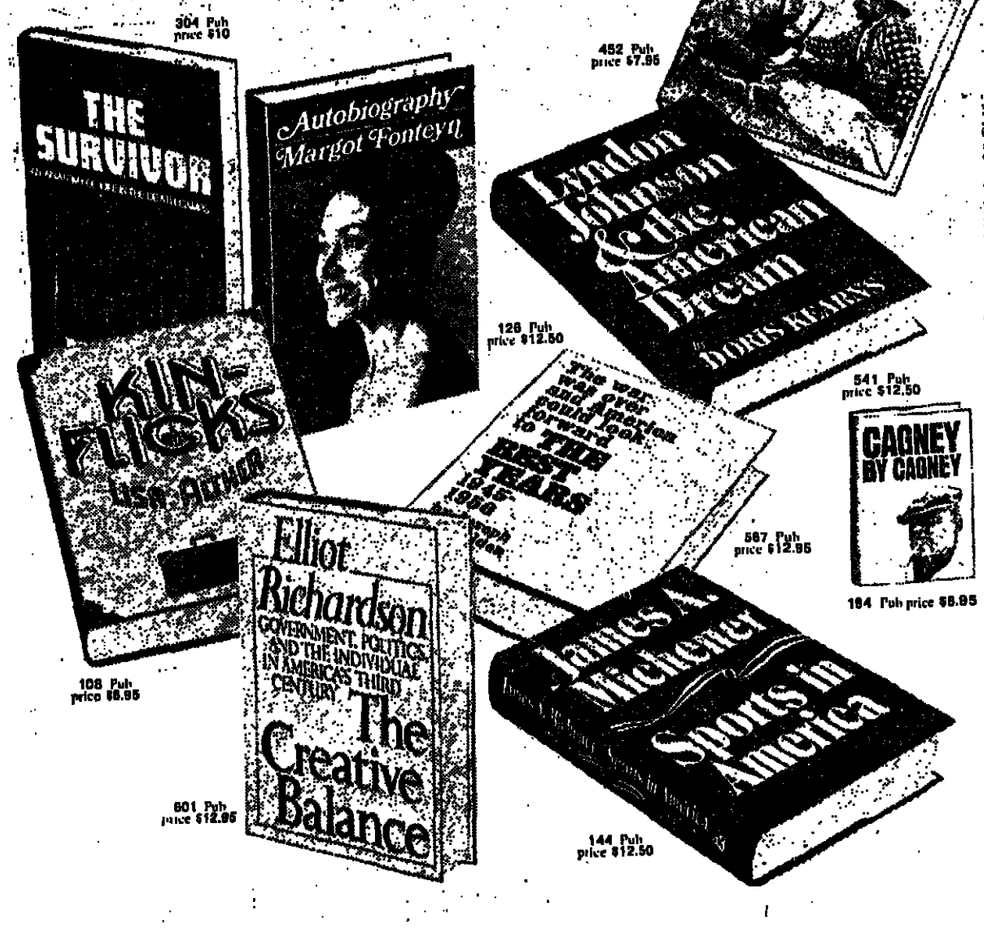
The books America is reading are in America's Bookstore — BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB®

JUST glance at these pages and you'll see many of the best books by many of the world's outstanding authors. Exciting, important new books like these—read and discussed by intelligent people all over the country—are regularly offered in America's Bookstore—the Book-of-the-Month Club. And for shoppers who appreciate convenience as well as excellence, there's no better place to find both—and save money, too. As a beginning member, you may choose any four of the books included here for only $1. If you continue past the trial period, you'll go on saving money on the Book-of-the-Month Club's unique Book-Dividend® plan—a sensible way to build a superb home library and save 70% or more on publishers' list prices.



Prices shown are publishers' U.S. prices. Outside the U.S., prices are generally somewhat higher.

As your introduction to membership you are invited to choose

ANY 4 FOR ONLY $1

THE SUGGESTED TRIAL: You simply agree to buy four Club choices within a year at substantial savings on most books you choose

SOME OF THE BENEFITS OF MEMBERSHIP...

- In addition to getting four books for $1 when you join, you keep saving substantially on most of the books you buy.
- And these are true savings because every book offered is identical to the publisher's edition in content, format, size and quality.
- You'll learn about the coming Selection and Alternates in the Book-of-the-Month Club News®, a literary magazine sent to you fifteen times a year (approximately every three and a half weeks).
- If you want the Selection, you need do nothing — it will be shipped to you automatically.
- If you do not want the Selection — or you'd like one of the Alternates or no book at all — simply indicate your decision on the reply form enclosed with the News and mail it so we'll receive it by the date specified.
- If, because of late mail delivery of the News, you should receive a Selection without having had 10 days to decide whether you want it, that Selection may be returned at Club expense.

Management

Merrill Lynch's Secret of Success

The New York Times/Robert M. Klein

The top management team at Merrill Lynch: Roger E. Birk, left, who becomes president and chief administrative officer of the parent holding company next week; Donald T. Regan, center, chairman and chief executive of both the holding company and the brokerage house, and Thomas J. Cassady, who will be president of the brokerage firm, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith.

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

In 1970, after Wall Street's paperwork crisis had capsized scores of brokerage houses, the head of a rival firm grudgingly paid a compliment to Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. "They are a decade ahead of us in management techniques," he said.

Merrill Lynch, in sailing ahead to become the world's largest securities broker, commodities dealer and corporate underwriter, has never lost any momentum—or any money—since Charles E. Merrill formed the nucleus of the firm in 1941 and set out to popularize stock ownership among the American public.

What is the clue to its prolonged success? And what is unique about its management techniques?

The basic answer to the first question is that planning has been a consistent hallmark of the firm. In the early stages, Mr. Merrill himself broke new ground in Wall Street by issuing annual reports and starting a training school for salesmen. In subsequent decades, the process of looking ahead, plotting strategy, utilizing computer technology and moving into new profit areas took on an ever-increasing sophistication.

For example, a 15-man task force devoted more than two years to produce the basic plan last autumn for Merrill Lynch's approach to a national electronic securities market. Nearly two years of preparation have gone into a far less ambitious project: In September the firm expects to offer for sale—at around $35 a year—a market letter published every two weeks for investors.

The answer to the second question is laid out by Donald T. Regan, the prime architect of Merrill Lynch's success in recent years, as follows:

"We're applying techniques of other financial services companies such as banks and insurance companies, adapted in turn from techniques which worked so well for manufacturing firms."

As a result, the management process—still haphazard in many other brokerage

The Booming Home Remodeling Industry

By CLARE M. RECKERT

Priced out of the market for new and bigger homes, people are taking the job of providing housing into their own hands.

They are investing their money in their present living quarters; into the addition of rooms, into siding, roofing, flooring, painting, plumbing and other remodeling.

Americans spent a record total of $26.6 billion on home modernization and maintenance last year, according to John J. Butler, president of the National Home Improvement Council. By contrast only $35 billion went for new homes, the lowest in 30 years.

With the expansion of real disposable personal income and renewed consumer confidence, home remodeling expenditures in the first quarter of this year increased to an estimated $6 billion to $7 billion, a substantial figure for what is normally the lowest quarter of the year. Expenditures for new housing also went up significantly, totaling $11 billion for the first four months compared with $7.8 billion a year ago.

Mr. Butler, who is also a vice president of the GAF Corporation, a major producer of roofing, siding and flooring products, said industry experts believed the remodeling figure could approach $29 billion to $30 billion this year. Some forecasters envision an annual outlay of at least $35 billion by 1980.

Homeowners last year added well over four million rooms the equivalent of 700,000 new six-room homes, while builders raised only 870,000 new one-family homes. The addition of new living quarters accounted for $1 of every $5 of the home-care investment, according to the Census Bureau. The bureau noted that half the money spent on remodeling and maintenance went into do-it-yourself projects.

New wings are added to houses. Porches, breezeways and garages are created, or sometimes converted into expanded living quarters. Basements and attics are finished off or insulated to reduce fuel bills. Single-level homes sometimes become duplexes.

Remodeling and renovating work is providing a vigorous growth market for the building-materials manufacturers, according to Jesse Werner, chairman of GAF. Building materials accounted for 39 percent of the company's business, which produced a record total of $964 million in sales last year, he noted. Roofing, siding and resilient flooring sales of $24.1 million rose 32 percent over the first quarter of 1975, he added.

The market for lumber and wood products used in home improvement and maintenance work will grow by 56 percent over the next 10 years, according to Frost & Sullivan, a market research company. It predicted that the market for hardware, plumbing, paint, electrical and other nonwood supplies would grow by 66 percent.

AMEX UNIT VOTES TO RESCIND RULES ON DUAL TRADING

Plan Lets Companies Retain Listed Status After Getting Acceptance by N.Y.S.E.

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

The board of governors of the American Stock Exchange voted yesterday to rescind a 65-year-old rule prohibiting dual trading of issues on the Amex and the New York Stock Exchange.

The move, considered one of the most significant in recent years, will open the way for direct competition between the two major stock exchanges.

The Amex rule had prohibited continued trading in any Amex-listed security admitted to dealings on the New York Stock Exchange.

The New York exchange has a similar rule that prohibits its members from making a market in a stock listed on any exchange in New York other than the Big Board.

First Step to Competition

Paul Kolton, chairman of the American Exchange, said: "This action by the exchange's board is in keeping with the competitive thrust of the 1975 Securities Acts Amendment and represents a new policy under which dual trading would exist at the nation's two principal stock exchanges in those cases where managements of Amex-listed companies elect to retain their Amex stock listing concurrent with admission of their securities to dealings on the New York Stock Exchange."

Industry observers were generally of the opinion that the Amex action was but the first practical step in creating a central market place for all securities and to increased competition between all the nation's exchanges.

The Amex announcement took notice of this possibility by stating that it "plans to study the broader implications of competitive markets, including the possibility of trading a wider group of securities."

William M. Batten, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, commented: "The N.Y.S.E. supports the constructive action begun today by the board of governors of the American Stock Exchange that may in the future permit simultaneous trading of certain stocks listed on both exchanges.

"Elimination of the so-called New York City rules would promote competition and is entirely consistent with N.Y.S.E. policy.

"The N.Y.S.E. will recommend to its board at the earliest possible opportunity the elimination of constitutional provisions that work against competitive trading of these securities among exchanges in New York."

Review Requested

The Amex chairman said that the necessary constitutional amendments will be submitted for action at a special meeting of the exchange membership and if approved would be sent to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In May the S.E.C. requested the two New York City exchanges to make a prompt review of their constitutional rules that prohibit dual trading.

Under the plan approved by the Amex board yesterday, companies that elect to do so would continue their fully listed status on the Amex if and when they seek and are accepted for listing on the Big Board.

More than half of the stocks currently listed on the Big Board were at one time on the Amex or its predecessor, the Curb Exchange. Furthermore, the most profitable Amex stock for specialists are those that move to the New York Exchange. These are the stocks with the heaviest trading.

Over the last five years 136 Amex companies have been admitted to trading on the New York Stock Exchange and delisted on the Amex. The Amex

Federal Funds Rate Declines; Narrow Money Supply Is Down

But Broadly Based Measure Rises—Loans Are Off

The nation's money supply, and currency, declined by $300 million during the week ended June 30, the Federal Reserve reported yesterday. On a broader definition, including consumer-type time deposits, money supply rose $1.4-billion.

This resulted in an average of $302.8 billion for the four weeks ended June 30 for the money supply (M-1), down at a 3.8 percent compounded annual rate from the average $303.7 billion during the four weeks ended June 2.

M-2, the more broadly defined money supply averaged $700.6 billion in the four weeks ended June 30 up 4.6 percent at an annual rate from the $698.2 billion averaged during the four weeks ended June 2.

The Federal funds rate, a key indicator of monetary policy, declined by almost a quarter of a point to 5.37 percent in the week ended Wednesday. Whether this decline is a signal of easing in Fed policy remains to be seen according to market analysts. Most other short-term rates rose slightly in the latest week.

In his testimony before the Joint Economic Committee on June 30, Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, described the "somewhat less accommodative" stance of the Fed starting in late April to "ward off the threat of excessive growth of the monetary aggregates."

He went on to testify that

Low-Priced Issues Set Market Pace

Lower-price stocks continued to attract buying interest yesterday as basic-industry issues took a back seat on Wall Street. The Dow Jones industrial average rose only slightly although volume picked up substantially.

The only component among the 30 Dow Jones industrials to show more than a fractional change was Du Pont, which tumbled 2⅞ to 132½. This represented a resumption of the selling pressure in Du Pont last week, when the giant chemical producer dropped more than 5 points after disclosing

Interest Level Dips to 5.31 From 5.37 Weekly Average

By JOHN H. ALLAN

Interest rates declined yesterday—sharply in some cases—as the credit markets became largely convinced that the Federal Reserve over the last three days had moved to ease monetary conditions slightly in the wake of June's slow money-supply growth.

Credit Markets

The interest rate on Federal funds, which had declined to an average of 5.37 percent in the week ended Wednesday from 5.58 percent the preceding week, dipped to 5.31 yesterday and the central bank made no move to prop it up.

As a consequence, traders in the money and bond markets shed their doubts that the Federal Reserve was willing to accept slightly lower interest rates than it did last month. Rates on three-month Treasury bills dropped seven basis points, six-month bill rates fell 13 basis points, and one-year bill rates went down 15 basis points—all substantial one-day moves for the money market.

A heavy volume of new tax-exempt bonds, including $100 million of Port Authority of New York and New Jersey revenue bonds yielding 8.20 percent, was marketed, and most of the securities sold rapidly. The Bond Buyer's index of tax-exempt bond yields fell to its lowest level since late April.

Rise in Big-Store Sales Highest Since December

By ISADORE BARMASH

June sales among New York City's biggest stores rose 6.4 percent over 1975, the largest monthly gain since last December. The increase marked a sharp improvement over May, when the results were the poorest in more than a decade.

Five out of six of the city's largest volume department stores had gains in the five weeks ended last Saturday, a survey found, while all six retailers and their branches in the metropolitan area topped last year's sales with an average 8 percent advance.

In May, seven of the city's biggest retailers had a decline of 7.6 percent, while metropolitan area sales were down by 5.6 percent.

June's gains benefited from an extra shopping day in the five-week period, heavy clearances of summer merchandise and seasonably hot weather, merchants said yesterday.

Across the country, consumer buying in June was moderately better than the year before and generally improved over the May level, according to sales reports issued yesterday by more than a dozen national and regional department-store and discount-store chains.

The largest national retailer, Sears, Roebuck and Company, Chicago, registered a 7.3 percent gain in its June sales, which totaled $1.45 billion. In

SOYBEANS SOAR ON SALE RUMORS

Talk of a New Soviet Deal Is Spur — Wheat and Corn Also Advance

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

After a day's respite, soybeans once again moved sharply higher amid a spate of rumors about possible new sales to the Soviet Union and elsewhere, such as China. The nearby July delivery closed at $7.20 a bushel, up from $7.07.

Earlier in the week before profit taking began, the July price hit $7.57, bolstered by news of recent sales of soybeans to the Soviet. Currently these sales total about 1.5 million tons, which traders believe is the amount that the Government has taken into consideration in its 1976-1977 supply-and-demand forecasts. Any additional orders could bring some Governmental dissuasion, according to commodity experts.

Yesterday's upward turn in prices partly took its impetus from surprisingly good soybean oil demand, which lifted the soybean oil price by about 1

Dubious Payments Disclosed by Marcor

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8—Marcor Inc., recently merged into the Mobil Corporation, made questionable foreign payments of $635,000 during the five years ended last January, a document made available today at the Securities and Exchange Commission disclosed.

The largest amount of the payments, $572,400, was listed in a Marcor's report for June as having gone to employees or representatives of private commercial customers of its Container Corporation of America subsidiary in three foreign countries that were not identified.

Bank accounts used to distribute money in one country were not reflected in the records of the Container Corporation's subsidiaries there, and some of the money in the accounts was generated through fictitious invoices, the report said.

Foreign Deals Involving Container Subsidiary Amount to $635,000

No illegal political contributions were found to have been made anywhere, the report said, although about $35,000 was paid by foreign subsidiaries of the Container Corporation in two countries where such contributions are believed legal.

Other payments included:

¶About $11,000 in amounts of more than $500 by a foreign subsidiary of the Container Corporation to government officials in one country "to expedite the performance of ministerial governmental functions."

¶ $12,000 late last year in connection with the transfer of registration of real estate rights on property purchased by a foreign subsidiary of the corporation.

¶ $21,000 to one or more tax officials in a foreign country under circumstances unknown to present management and monthly payments totaling $9,517 from 1972 to 1976 to the head of a district office of an organization described as comparable to a workmen's compensation board, apparently to avoid "excessive" safety inspections.

¶ $9,600 to the office manager of a financial institution for assistance in expediting an application to build a facility in a foreign country.

Marcor said the payments

Pending Bangor-Lone Star Deal

By ROBERT METZ

If the Bangor Punta Corporation goes through with its tentative plans to acquire 10 percent of Lone Star Industries stock from James E. Stewart, who is Lone Star's chairman and Bangor Punta's vice chairman, Mr. Stewart would receive a premium on at least 150,000 of the Lone Star shares.

Bangor Punta is a conglomerate, and Lone Star is the nation's largest producer of cement.

On Tuesday, when the possibility of Bangor's acquiring the 1.1 million Lone Star shares was announced, the stock closed at 15⅞, up ⅛. That price compares with the $17.026 a share Mr. Stewart would receive under the contemplated transaction for Bangor's first 150,000-share nibble at Lone Star.

John J. Martin, Bangor Punta's vice president and secretary, said that the price of $17.026 a share was determined by taking an average of the prices at which Lone Star traded over the four months preceding the announcement.

Mr. Martin explained that the four-month average price would "tend to eliminate distortions." Nevertheless, the contemplated $17.026 for the first 150,000 shares would result in a $180,000 premium over Tuesday's closing price of 15⅞. But the stock closed at 16 on Wednesday and might be considerably above or below the contemplated transaction price when and if the deal is consummated.

Mr. Martin said that two investment bankers would be asked to give an opinion as to the fairness of the price and other details of the transaction. Bangor Punta would acquire options for the remaining 950,000 shares with the right to exercise them at intervals stretching over a nine-year period. Prices on 400,000 additional shares would also be $17.026. Prices for the remaining 550,000 shares would be based on a second four-month average price just prior to the initial acquisition of the second 550,000 shares, Mr. Martin indicated.

Bangor Punta has said that it would acquire the shares as an investment. A broker who follows cement company shares closely thought the investment would be a good one.

The broker noted Lone Star's strong position in the industry and that the book value of the shares was $23.32 at the end of 1975. He noted also that Lone Star paid 25 cents a share per quarter and thus offered a yield of more than 6 percent at current prices.

As for the value of the shares, it might well be that a 10 percent interest would give Bangor Punta effective control of Lone Star, thereby adding attractiveness to the purchase.

A corporate lawyer observed that it appeared Bangor Punta could avoid criticism if the transaction were submitted to shareholders for approval. This would involve the printing of proxy materials and submissions to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Mr. Martin was asked whether the shares were restricted and he said that they were. The shares were acquired by Mr. Stewart, he said, when Mr. Stewart's company, National Building Centers, was acquired by Lone Star. Mr. Stewart was not available for comment.

Restricted shares cannot ordinarily be sold without prior registration with the S.E.C. The rule would not obtain if the shares were disposed of in a private transaction. A week or so ago when officers of Pickwick International Inc., a record and tape distributor, sold shares to the Hartz Mountain Corporation they did so at a substantial discount from the market price at that time.

Mr. Martin explained that under S.E.C. Rule 144, restricted shares can be sold after two years at a stipulated rate. The holder may sell in any six months the lesser of 1 percent of the company's shares outstanding and the average weekly volume for the four preceding weeks.

Over the nine years contemplated by the Bangor Punta plan, Mr. Stewart could probably sell all his shares under Rule 144, Mr. Martin added.

Galvanized steel works near Strasbourg in France. Major changes are taking place in European steel industry. German, Dutch and Luxembourg steel companies have been cooperating closely, leaving as outsiders the industries of Britain, France and Italy.

French-German Steel Discord Growing

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, July 8 — Major changes are taking place in the politics and structure of the European steel industry with serious implications for the Common Market and the concept of French-West German cooperation in coal and steel, which brought the Europeans together in the early 1950's.

What has been happening has been a process of division between, on one side, West German, Dutch and Luxembourg steel companies, which are cooperating ever more closely and now even forming a separate club, and, on the other, the outsiders, composed mainly of the industries of France, Italy and Britain.

Unwelcome Assertion

The split has been caused in large measure by differences in economic philosophy between those in the West German-led group who are committed more to the free play of market forces than the others, whose industries are either state-controlled or heavily dependent on state intervention.

Cross-frontier fusions of West German, Dutch and Luxembourg companies and plans to unite the steel federations of the three countries have provoked strong reactions among the outsiders, and especially the French, who see an unwelcome assertion of West German national power and even a new German-led cartel in the making.

So great has been the disquiet here that President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing of France took up the issue with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany during their recent meeting in Hamburg.

An agreement between the two leaders announced yesterday seeks to restore some of the shattered authority of the European Coal and Steel Community, now one of the agencies of the Common Market. It had been formed in 1952 after the then Foreign Minister of France, Robert Schuman, had called for a pooling in French and German coal and steel.

The steel authority of the community is now to present specific plans before the end of the year for a new steel strategy that would reinforce its powers to intervene in matters of investment, prices and production.

Behind the current European steel imbroglio was the deep recession in the industry last year—and the conflict mainly between the French and the West Germans over how to deal with it.

The French wanted the community steel authority to set minimum price levels and even raise tariffs on some imports, which ran counter to the grain of the Germans, who thought that closer industrial cooperation was the answer.

Last February, in a move stimulated by the largest West German steel company, the Thyssen group, the steel federations of West Germany, Luxembourg and the Netherlands, announced that they would form a common organization based in Luxembourg to represent their external interests.

Common purchases of foreign raw materials such as iron ore are among the probable functions of the new organization, which a German federation spokesman said today would go into operation within the next two weeks.

Belgian Company Acquired

The steel industries of the three countries produce about 70 million tons of steel a year, nearly triple the output of France and more than half that of the European Economic Community's 130 million tons last year.

Collaboration of the three countries in steel has already been strengthened by the merger between the second largest West German company, the Hoesch group, and the biggest Dutch company, Hoogovens, and by the acquisition by Arbed, the Luxembourg giant (and only steel company of that country) of West Germany's Roeschling-Burback, the largest steel company of the Saar region.

Arbed has furthermore acquired a Belgian steel company, Sidmar, which is in Dutch-speaking Flanders. Belgians complain that the new three-nation steel organization would further divide their country by drawing in the Flemish sector of their industry, while the Coquerille group, in French-speaking Wallonia, would be outside.

For Mercedes Customers, Prestige Hinges on Waitir

By ELLEN LENTZ
Special to The New York Times

STUTTGART, West Germany, July 7 — Customers around the world who want to buy a new Mercedes-Benz —whether they are movie stars, Arab princes or ordinary businessmen — may have to wait well over a year for delivery of the prestigious West German car.

This prolonged waiting period is attributed to the fact that Mercedes workers are given first choice at purchasing, a company official noted. (Prices for standard Mercedes sedans in New York range from about $10,000 to $22,470.)

While other car manufacturers have suffered a slump as a result of the oil crisis and are just now recovering lost ground, Mercedes has recorded an uninterrupted slow but steady growth. Overall business last year rose to $8.4 million, a 23 percent increase.

However, unit sales at Mercedes went up by only 3 percent, totaling 350,098 cars, and for this year the manufacturers, Daimler-Benz of Stuttgart, have set a production target of only 360,000 passenger cars. Truck business climbed by a record of 11 percent in 1975.

Lacking in Facilities

The company acknowledges that it has been unable to meet growing demands in an increasingly strong car market, both domestically and outside West Germany.

Largely because additional capacity is lacking at the company's two main plants, at Untertürkheim and Sindelfingen, outside this Swabian capital, large production increases are precluded.

"It is an open secret that we cannot expand production under present conditions," Bernd Harling, a company spokesman told a visitor.

He said customers now had to wait 14 to 16 months before the cars they had ordered actually rolled off the production belt. At Stuttgart, everyone agrees that this would have to change, but no one seems to know how.

What annoys some and pleases others is that the only category of people who get their cars delivered promptly without any undue delays are the Mercedes auto workers.

Each of the 130,000 employees is entitled to buy a new car once a year at a discount rate of 21.5 percent. Last year, 40,200 new passenger cars went to Mercedes workers.

At Sindelfingen, an idyllic town set into vineyards and rolling fields, visitors found that the sleek luxury sedans outnumbered by far the more modest Volkswagens or other compact cars customarily seen in German working-class settings.

Of the 33,000 workers at the Sindelfingen assembly 10,000 own Mercedes cars.

"We had to enlarge the parking lots at the plant to accommodate the big automobiles," Mr. Harling noted.

Jurgen Creutzig, a spokesman for the Bonn Car Dealers' Association, called the situation "irregular" and said he was looking into the legal aspects.

"It is unbelievable," he said, "that we car dealers cannot get the cars we need f clients, while the work ceive their autos on tin in addition benefit super discount rates said most auto worke their cars after one use at sizable profits.

May. Sears had a gain of 4.1 percent, compared with rises of 12.1 percent in March and 11.8 percent in April. In the 22 weeks ended last Saturday, Sears' sales rose 9 percent to $6.15 billion.

The S.S. Kresge Company, Troy, Mich., continued its recent trend of exceeding the sales of the J.C. Penney Company, which had long been the chain second largest in volume to Sears. Kresge's June sales advanced 21.7 percent to $791 million, while 22-week sales moved up 21.6 percent to $3.1 billion.

Much of Kresge's gains stem from the large number of new K Mart discount stores it has opened. There were 1,507 stores in operation on June, compared with 1,370 the year before. Kresge's sales rose 12.8 percent in May, 36.2 percent in April and 16.5 percent in March.

J.C. Penney's sales in June rose 6.5 percent to $720 million and its sales in the first five months of the fiscal year, which began Feb. 1, were up 11.2 percent to $3.01 billion. In earlier months, Penney sales rose 7.1 percent in May, 20.1 percent in April and 8 percent in March.

The F. W. Woolworth Company had 10.2 percent higher sales in June, totaling $473 million, and had an 11.8 percent increase in its 22 week sales to $1.954 billion.

Montgomery Ward, a unit of the Mobil Corporation, said its June sales advanced 4.4 percent to $356 million and its 22 week sales were up 7 percent to $1.55 billion.

Other chain-store sales showed increases over the year-ago levels. The May Department Stores Company reported 7.3 percent higher sales in June to $193 million. The Dayton Hudson Corporation had a sales gain in June of 7.8 percent, to $159.5 million. The Zayre Corporation said its June sales rose 10.1 percent to $115.5 million. The Melville Shoe Corporation registered the biggest gain in June sales, 40.2 percent, with sales totaling $100.2 million.

In New York, a substantial part of the improved business was attributed to shifts in the calendar, which contributed additional volume to the month.

Retail Store Sales Up 14%

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 8—The Department of Commerce reported today that department store sales in the latest week were an estimated $1.24 billion, up 19 percent from the year-earlier level of $1.05 billion. Total retail store sales were about $12.95 billion, a rise of 14 percent from last year's $11.33 billion.

Bond and Federal Funds Rates Decline

the Northern Illinois Gas Company sold $50 million of bonds, rated Aa by Moody's and AA by Standard & Poor's, that underwriters priced to yield 8.70 percent. This rate of return was 5 basis points below the 8.75 percent yield on similarly rated Wisconsin Electric Power Company bonds that were sold quickly on Wednesday.

The Northern Illinois Gas issue did not sell so rapidly, but it was more than half sold by the end of the day, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, the managing underwriter, reported. The bonds carry an 8¾ percent interest rate, and they are priced at 100.50 percent of face value to produce their 8.70 percent yield to maturity in 2001.

The credit market's performance yesterday was clearly based on its interpretation of the Federal Reserve's actions this week.

"There's enough circumstantial evidence to show that the monetary authorities have eased off," one leading Treasury securities dealer commented as he sought to interpret the Reserve's behavior this week.

The Federal Reserve bought $150 million of Treasury securities yesterday for the official accounts it handles, and it could have made the purchase without showing the order to the market, he noted as he described the "circumstantial evidence" he found this week.

On Tuesday, the Federal Reserve had remained inactive as the funds rate declined to 5 percent. On Wednesday, it had supplied temporary reserves to the banking system when the funds rate inched up to 5 9/16 percent.

After the money supply figures were released yesterday, the credit markets remained firm, but they showed no pronounced response. Even so, several bond dealers asserted that the figures were a convincing reason for concluding that interest rates would head still lower over the near-term future.

The narrowly defined money supply, one analyst noted, had actually declined to $301.6 billion in the week ended June 30 from $302.3 billion in the week ended April 28. This analyst noted, too, that the Open Market Committee on May 18 had agreed that growth in M-1 over the May-June period within a range of 4 to 7½ percent "would be acceptable."

With money growth falling so far below the target range, it is not surprising to see the Federal Reserve ease a little bit now, he concluded.

It was the tax-exempt sector of the capital markets that was the most active yesterday.

The Port Authority sold its $100 million of A-rated 35-year term bonds to a group of underwriters headed by Bache Halsey Stuart that submitted the only bid made. It resulted in an interest cost to the authority of 8.27 percent.

The bonds were subsequently offered to investors as 8.20s at 100, and they were quoted late in the afternoon at 99⅞ bid, a price that indicated a quick sale of the issue.

In Albany, Controller Arthur Levitt announced that New York State planned to sell $45 million of bonds at competitive bidding July 21. The bonds will mature serially from 1977 to 2001.

In the corporate bond market, the Morgan Stanley & Company syndicate that began selling $300 million of Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company debentures back on June 24 was terminated yesterday with the issue almost entirely sold.

been doing busi- 5 years with UNI- re a good, steady said Mr. Jacobs, cutive vice presi- company.

tions taken by the suggest the wide at are increasingly nerican companies t with United Na- ies. The profit in- a strong motiva- it the only one.

Soon after the establishment of the United Nations Environment Program, 20 major American and foreign oil companies joined to set up a liaison organization called the International Petroleum Industry Environment Conservation Association, with headquarters in London and a $300,000 budget to promote exchange of data among members.

"It was a natural development to set up our group to interface with UNEP," said Leo J. Blatz of the Exxon Corporation. He is deputy chairman of the association.

The United Nations Environment Program, sets standards or guidelines for good environmental practices, which it offers to the oil industry.

American industry was slow to awaken to the profit potential that exists in the United Nations programs, according to William Allen, who works out of an office at the United States delegation's headquarters, seeing to it that American companies are kept abreast of the opportunities. "The United Nations has become big business," he said.

Nowhere are the chances brighter for American enterprises than at the United Nations Development Program, which acts as "banker" for financing 14 separate agencies in the United Nations system engaged in promoting agricultural and industrial development in the third world. In 1975, the Development Program supported 8,000 projects whose value, when completed, will total $4.6 billion. The organization provided $465 million and the balance comes from the recipient countries, the World Bank and priyate investors.

Next to the United Nations Children's Fund, the agency is the largest buyer of equipment in the United Nations system and spent $63.3 million last year. The American share went from $9 million in 1973 to $19.8 million last year.

But the bigger prospects for American companies are in the contracts the Development Program gives out for feasibility and pre-investment activities and which can and do lead to multimillion-dollar progams in developing highway, railways and communications systems and promoting new industries. Contracts to American companies climbed from $2.2 million in 1973 to $21.8 million last year.

Until this upward trend developed, more aggressive British and French concerns bested the Americans in competing for awards, according to Mr. Allen.

The followup potential can be significant: A survey in West Africa by French and American companies for a railroad in Gabon has led to a $700-million project in which American companies will share. An American consortium of banks will back a $150-million copper mining project in Mexico.

The prestige element is also a strong incentive, according to a number of companies that have worked for United Nations agencies.

It's helpful to a company, "even in these difficult days," said John Olver, assistant administration of the UNDP, alluding to the lowered prestige of the world organization in the United States.

A number of officials of United Nations agencies feel that American concerns, through their organizational connections, gain an entree into countries that otherwise might not be prepared to open their doors readily. However, company officials seemed to discount this as a benefit and insisted that they would be admitted readily because of their technological superiority.

Both sides agreed that United Nations projects often posed challenges that made them attractive to American companies, particularly to those looking for experience for young engineers.

One such project, to draft a master plan for the development of the Vardar River in Yugoslavia and the Axios River in Greece, is being undertaken by Tippetts-Abbett-McCarthy-Stratton, assisted by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

In a number of other instances, American companies have welcomed the chance to try new technologies. A case in point is a project for Revere Copper and Brass Inc. to establish a metallurgical demonstration plant in India for a new hydrostatic extrusion process that could make it possible to substitute cheaper metals for copper in tubings and wire. The process was developed at Western Electric but has not been tested.

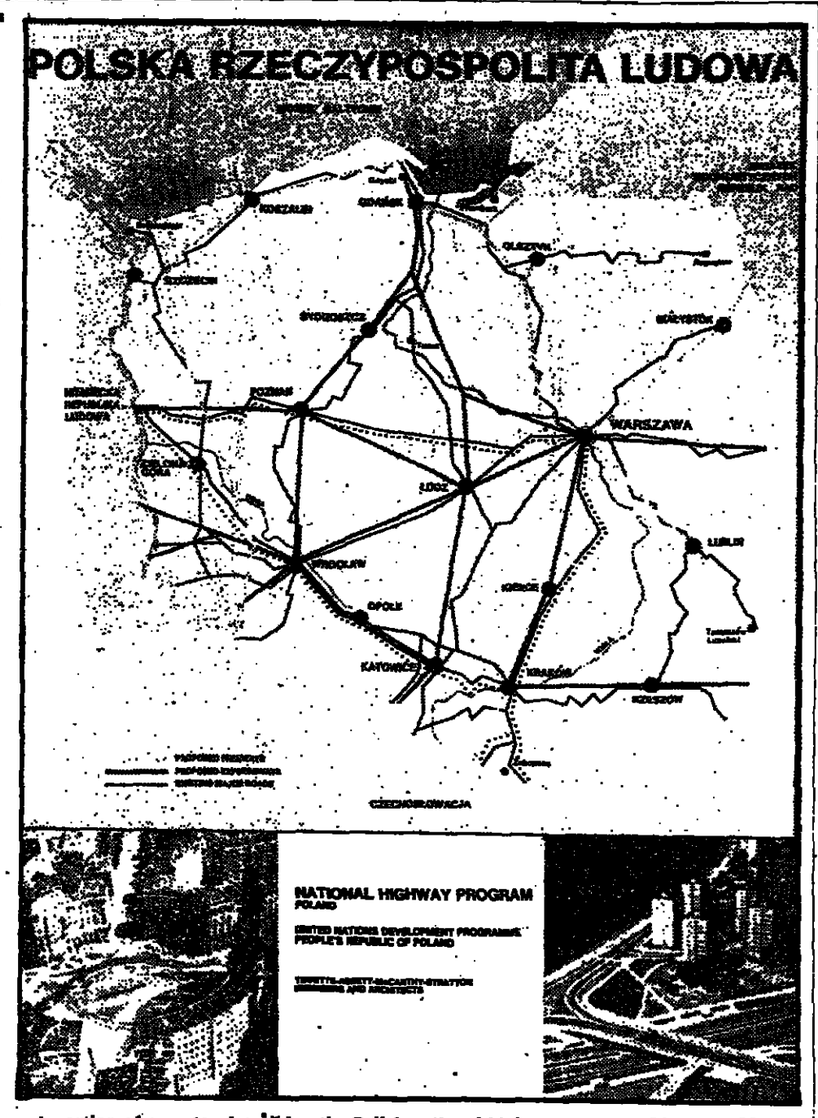
Information about developments in food or agriculture, fisheries or forestry flows into the Food and Agriculture Organization from many sources, but often from participants in its Industry Cooperative Program.

Expansion of agriculture in third-world countries also has become a big business, and the F.A.O.'s Industry Cooperative Program was created 10 years ago as a link between the developing countries and the leaders of the argi-business world, such as Mr. Cornelsen of Ralston Purina.

Under the program, senior executives from 106 companies are involved, giving their expert help to promote improved output in the third world.

A company such as Ralston Purina does not stand to profit from stimulating Turkey to export its fruits or Tanzania its cashews, but executives such as Mr. Cornelsen support the operation even through it costs money out-of-pocket. An annual membership fee of $6,500 is charged to keep a small staff at F.A.O. headquarters in Rome and to run the Cooperative Program's clearing-house activities. Many companies also lend their experts for short-term projects in third-world countries.

The benefits for the membership would seem to be in the intangibles cited by Mr. Cornelsen to justify the expenditure in money and time. "The benefit will be if we still will be operating 20 or 50 years from now," he said.



A portion of a poster describing the Polish national highway program. Tippetts-Abbett-McCarthy-Stratton, an American engineering and architectural company, worked on the project under a program financed by the United Nations Development Program.

A.M.C. Names 3 Men To Office of President

The American Motors Corporation announced yesterday the formation of an office of the president, which would be manned by three of its senior executives. Roy D. Chapin Jr., 60, continues as chairman and chief executive officer, a position he has held since January 1967.

The office of the president will include William V. Luneburg, 64, who has been president and chief operating officer since 1967. Joining him in that office will be R. William McNealy Jr., 48, who was named vice chairman of the company last November, and Gerald C. Meyers, 47, who was named executive vice president last November. Mr. McNealy and Mr. Meyers joined American Motors in 1962. Industry observers viewed yesterday's announcement as part of a "moving up" process whereby the youngest executives are being given additional responsibilities prior to assuming command at the automobile company. Small-car sales have suffered as the public preference has switched back to larger models.

A delay in the scheduled Aug. 17 sale of offshore oil and gas leases off New Jersey and Delaware was sought yesterday by Representative John M. Murphy, New York Democrat. The Congressman, who heads an ad hoc Congressional committee on the outer continental shelf, asked Secretary of the Interior, Thomas S. Kleppe, to delay the coming lease sale until Congress acts on legislation updating the 23-year-old Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act.

Noting that his committee had been working for more than a year on legislation to update the continental shelf act, Representatives Murphy declared: "The Interior Department should not continue with lease sales until the O.C.S. bill has been acted on by Congress." Final House action on the measure is expected the week of July 19.

Douglas Anthony, Deputy Prime Minister of Australia, left yesterday for a two-week trip to the Soviet Union and Rumania where he has scheduled a series of trade talks. Asked at a news conference in Canberra whether he had any concerns about exporting Australian uranium to Russia, he expressed no apprehension. "Our uranium," he said, "will only be sold to people who can vouch that it will be used for peaceful purposes."

Toy Maker to Cut Size Of Package Containers

LOS ANGELES, July 8 (UPI) —A New York to maker accused of deceiving buyers by marketing toys in containers, up to three times larger than necessary, has agreed to reduce the package size when the current supply runs out.

The stipulated judgment ended a superior court civil suit filed yesterday by Deputy Attorney General Michael R. Botwin accusing Avalon Industries Inc., of unfair business practices.

Mr. Botwin said the concern's paper dolls, sewing cards and other toy and craft items were packaged in boxes that could have been reduced as much as 71 percent and still contain the items.

"The oversize containers tend to create mistaken impressions in the minds of children and adults that they are receiving a larger-sized product than is actually the case," Mr. Botwin said.

Avalon Industries agreed to reduce the size of the containers when its present supply of oversized packages ran out or at least by May 1, 1977.

G.E. Completes Design Of Two Subzero Motors

The General Electric Company, Schenectady, N.Y., reported yesterday that it had completed design and started construction of two 3,000 horsepower cryogenic, or supercold, electric engine motors for the United States Navy.

The motors are designed to operate on liquid helium at temperatures as low as 450 degrees below zero fahrenheit — close to absolute zero. Electricity flow at such temperatures meets zero resistance, a factor that reduces fuel consumption and allows use of lighter, more compact engines. The two G.E. engines will weigh only 7,000 pounds each, compared with 25,000 for a conventional 3,000 horsepower marine electric motors.

The Garrett Airesearch Corporation, division of the Garrett Corporation, Los Angeles, has the Navy's contract to produce a companion cryogenic generator to power the G.E. motors. The system is envisioned for the first use in high speed naval surface craft such as hydrofoils and the twin-hulled Swath vessels, which use gas turbines as primary power.

The new motors, on which G.E. began design work 18 months ago, are regarded as possible forerunners of supercold engines as large as 40,000 horsepower that may power naval vessels in the 1980's. The first motor is scheduled for sea trials in late 1977. The design contract is valued at $4.57 million.

Teleprompter Test

The Teleprompter Corporation of New York has announced that it is currently testing a new light-wave communicaions medium that utilizes an optical fibre about as thick as a human hair. The fibre, which can substitute for a conventional ¾ inch coaxial cable, has been introduced in the company's Manhattan Television system. It serves as a conductor for a pulsating beam of light, which is transformed into electrical impulses at the receiving end. Teleprompter said that the cable being used in the test is less than ¼ inch thick, but it can carry more than 1,000 video channels — 25 times the coaxial cable's capacity. Fiber Communicaions Inc., Orange, N. J., and the Belden Corporation, Geneva, Ill., are participating in the test.

La Quinta Sells Units

La Quinta Motor Inn, San Antonio, said that it had sold two of its older motels with a resultant net after-tax gain of $200,000, or 13 cents a share, that will be reflected in earnings for the company's first fiscal quarter, ending Aug. 31. The properties sold were the 75-room Rodeways Motor Inn at McAllen, Tex., opened in 1963, and the 131-room La Quinta Motor Inn in Dallas, opened in 1968. The sales prices were not disclosed. The company operates 58 motels, directly owned or under franchise, in the United States and Mexico.

Fraser to Expand

Fraser Companies, Edmundston, New Brunswick, said its recent private placement of a $35 million issue of Series B debentures will probably be all the external financing the company will need for its new modernization and expansion program. The Fraser Companies, a producer of pulp paperboard and lumber, is a subsidiary of Noranda Mines Ltd. It plans a $91.5 million expansion of its 58-year-old pulp mill in Edmundston over the next three years.

Gulf Oil Canada Plans Record Outlay

Gulf Oil Canada Ltd., 68.5 percent owned by the Gulf Oil Corporataion, will spend a record $467 million this year on capital and exploration projects, more than double what had been a record $218 million spent last year, J. L. Stoik, president, said in a presentation to security analysts.

Among major items in this year's outlay will be $76 million for exploration, principally in Western Canada and the Canadian Arctic; $103 million for the company's share in the construction costs of the Syncrude Tar Sands oil processing plant in Alberta and $174 million for other unspecified projects.

Avco Corp. Proposes Exchange of Stock

The Avco Corporation, a diversified company in defense and aerospace manufacturing, radio and television broadcasting, consumer loans and credit card operations (Carte Blanche) and insurance, announced yesterday that it was proposing an exchange of new 25-year convertible subordinated debenture for up to 2 million shares of its outstanding $3.20 preferred stock.

A spokesman for the company said that the exchange, involving stock valued at $84 million, would serve as a means of compensating shareholders for arrearage on the $3.20 preferred stock amounting to $5.60 a share. The arrearage dates from September of 1974, or for a total of seven quarters.

Avco is offering to exchange for each $3.20 preferred share, $42 principal amount of the new debentures due May 31, 2001, bearing interest at an annual rate of 9⅝ percent, from the effective date of the exchange offer and convertible after March 31, 1977 into Avco common at $17 a share.

Through operations of a sinking fund, 5 percent of the principal amount of the debentures then outstanding will be redeemed yearly from 1986 through 2000. The offer will be conditioned upon Avco's receiving prior consent of holders of two-thirds of its outstanding preferred shares.

The Avco debentures will be redeemable after July 31, 1978, at the option of Avco at 108.50 percent of the principal amount on or prior to May 31, 1979.

Avco reported net sales of $608.42 million in 1975 and a net income of $60.8 million. In 1974, it showed a deficit of $20.68 million on sales of $586.58 million restated to reflect discontinued operations.

Sears, Whirlpool Held Guilty in Antrust Suit

Sears, Roebuck & Company and the Whirlpool Corporation were found guilty yesterday of a conspiracy under the Sherman Antitrust Act to restrain trade, and a Federal jury awarded David Oreck, a distributor, $2,250,000 in treble damages.

The verdict highlighted a four-week trial before Judge Richard Owen of the Federal District Court for the Southern District of New York.

During the trial, Mr. Oreck testified that he had left his executive position with Bruno-N.Y. Inc., an RCA Corporation distributor, and entered the field of distributing Whirlpool vacuum cleaners. Later, however, he said, Whirlpool, which was producing Sears's Kenmore line of vacuum cleaners, allegedly conspired to terminate Mr. Oreck's company as the distributor. He also said that the two concerns had conspired to keep his company from engaging in business in Canada.

Thriftway Subsidy

The Thriftway Leasing Company, Piscataway, N. J., a leading lessor of commercial trailers and cargo container chassis, announced that it had applied to the United States Maritime Commission for a shipbuilding subsidy on the first vessel it is planning for its recently formed subsidiary, Rail-Sea Corporation. The wholly owned subsidiary will engage in long-term chartering and operating of ocean vessels. The first vessel will be a roll-on, roll-off trailer ship costing about $10 million. The company said it had not yet decided on the shipbuilding company from which it will order the vessel.

Note to Readers

The alphabetical listing of stocks in both the New York Stock Exchange and the American Stock Exchange tables has been changed in two respects.

Companies whose legal names consist of capital letters as all or part of their official names are now grouped at the top of each alphabetical division. ACF and ASA Ltd., for instance, will now appear before Abbott Labs, which previously headed the New York Stock list.

Companies with names like John Hancock and Jim Walter will be alphabetized by their surname—that is, under Hancock and Walter, respectively.

The Labor Scene

Transformed Attitudes at British Unions

The New York Times, Camera Press, Gilloon

Among those involved in the transformation of attitudes in British labor-management relations are, clockwise from the top left: Denis Healey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer; Jack Jones, president of the Transport and General Workers Union; Len Murray, general secretary of the Trades Union Congress, and Frank J. Chapple, the leader of the Electrical, Electronics, Telecommunications and Plumbing Union.

By A. H. RASKIN
Special to The New York Times

LONDON — Labor-management relations, long regarded as the Achilles heel of Britain's battered economy, are proving a key source of strength in the budding British recovery.

Tenuous as is the transformation of attitudes, there has already been enough movement to warrant modest optimism for long-term cooperation among unions, industry and the Government in restoring Britain to economic health.

True, many in both camps fear that the constructive approaches spawned by concern over the depth of Britain's plunge into economic dependency might be reversed as soon as the upturn becomes firmer.

But the immediate probability seems greater that a softening of calamitous past antagonisms will slowly evolve out of recognition of the new imperatives created for workers and employers alike by the pound's fall, the interconnection of global markets and the spread of multinational corporations, with their ability at will to transfer opportunities for jobs and investment across national boundaries.

This mutual awareness of the altered framework for economic survival is likely to find expression in innovative forms of social contract extending beyond the one that now links the Trades Union Congress and the ruling Labor Party on wage-price restraints and most other aspects of basic economic policy.

The Confederation of British Industry, once hostile to every form of peaceteime governmental tampering with the free market, is now actively developing its own social plan for Britain. It is determined to have positive ideas to throw into the economic mix. It even hopes to convert the present bilateral process of decision making on incomes policy into a tripartite system in which the employers sit as full partners.

What makes this insistence particularly remarkable is that Phase 2 of the British anti-inflation program, with its 4.5 percent limit on permissible pay increases and its slight easing of price curbs, will not even begin operating until Aug. 1.

Yet it is no secret that the program's principal architect, Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey, has already initiated talks on the design for Phase 3 a year hence. The employers, not to be left behind, have a policy group meeting every week to advance proposals of their own in timely fashion.

The new Healey plan will seek to walk the always perilous tightrope between increased flexibility to avert distortions and bottlenecks and the retention of sufficient rigidity to keep powerful unions and companies from wrecking the program by extorting undue gains through misuse of their industrial muscle.

One approach that will undoubtedly receive maior attention involves incentitives to stimulate employee productivity and to foster management investment in more efficent facilities.

Changes of this kind, intended to combine wage-price stability with adequate profitability for economic growth, could make a tripartite incomes policy a fixture in this homeland of Adam Smith and John Maynard Keynes. Indeed, an embracing social contract on the West German or Scandinavian model is very much a possibility, although undoubtedly ingenuity would be applied to incorporate distinctive "made in Britain" features.

The chief obstacle on the employers' side is the persistence in large sections of British management of "Colonel Blimp" elements, still resistant to any change in tradition-encrusted practices.

Similarly, on the union side a tremendous gulf remains between the sense of social responsibility reflected in last month's overwhelming vote of the Trades Union Congress to endorse a cut of roughly half in the ceiling on pay increases and the disruptive actions of many shop stewards. These stewards continue to impede the recovery by calling costly strikes over microscopic grievances.

Nevertheless, time lost through all strikes in the first five months of this year ran to less than half of last year's relatively low total, even though the pinch of the wage restraints of Phase 1 left the average worker's real earnings a shade behind the rising cost of living.

Parallel with this sharp drop in the strike toll has been an even more arresting indication of rank and file irritation with chaos-as-usual approaches by union officialdom. In five big unions, including two normally militant civil service groups, the membership overturned executive board recommendations to reject the new pay ceiling.

These results are in line with a long list of defeats for left-wingers in recent national and regional union elections. Unlike Italy and France, Britain has no mass Communist Party. However, Communists, Trotskyites and other members of militant minority parties have had a disproportionate hold on top posts in many of the country's dominant unions.

The strong support given to wage controls and the rest of the social contract by Jack Jones, president of the huge Transport and General Workers Union, and by Len Murray, general secretary of the Trades Union Congress, has contributed greatly to the recent decline in the left-wingers' obstructive influence.

Still, Britain's most outspoken anti-Communist union leader—Frank J. Chapple of the 450,000-member Electrical, Electronics, Telecommunications and Plumbing Union, just triumphantly reelected in a mail ballot—discounts the degree to which any real conversion to responsibility has taken place.

Despite Mr. Chapple's skepticism, industrialists do see small signs of a slowly improving attitude at the shop-steward level. Thus, E. J. Robertson, director of social affairs for the Confederation of British Industry, grinned when asked whether he felt stewards were getting educated to the need for modifying their strike-happy ways.

As a spur to faster movement toward responsible relations, some companies are already establishing programs for involving their workers in decision-making and in job redesign at the plant level.

So far the results have not been spectacular. At British Leyland, the automobile company at which the country's most ambitious program of worker participation was introduced recently, quickie strikes over trivial issues are still the rule. All that proves, in the company's opinion, is that a turnaround in basic relationships will take a long time to achieve.

That is probably the story for British labor-management relations as a whole. The question is whether Britain has the time.

Low Stocks Pace Gains On Market

that second-quarter profits will run below the level of the 1976 opening quarter.

After showing modest gains throughout the session, the Dow industrials added 0.82 point to 991.98.

Indicative of the broadening interest in lower-price issues, a number of actively traded stocks selling at between $10 and $16 a share posted fractional gains. These included Eastern Air Lines, the LTV Corporation, Curtiss Wright and G. D. Searle.

Ford Motor climbed a point to 57⅜ and Colgate-Palmolive advanced ⅝ to 28⅛. Both companies raised their quarterly dividends.

Spurring Inflation Fears

One recent depressant upon stock prices has been the fear that the Wholesale Price Index for June, scheduled for release this morning by the Government, would run at a relatively high level and spur inflation fears.

Some Wall Street estimates put the latest month's increase as high as 0.9 percent, or at an annualized rate reaching into double digits. The index rose 0.3 percent in May and 0.8 percent in April.

However, a modest increase of "around 0.5 percent" for June is forecast by Howard Sharpe, an economist with Purcell, Graham & Company. Such a gain would produce an annualized increase in the area of 6 percent.

The announcement after the close of Big Board trading yesterday that the nation's basic money supply fell by $300 million in the latest reporting week was viewed by Wall Street analysts as a favorable development for the stock market.

A string of declines in the money supply on a weekly basis has removed fears of a tighter credit policy on the part of the Federal Reserve. Some Government security traders said, in fact, that the Fed, as the nation's money manager, already has eased credit conditions by a notch.

Benefits for Soybeans

A. E. Staley gained 1⅞ to 30⅜ after climbing 2⅝ points in the previous session. There is conjecture that the company, as a major soybean processor, stands to benefit from the Government's soybean transactions with the Soviet Union.

The Beneficial Corporation, a leading consumer loan company, added ½ to 25¼ and traded at its best price of the year. The company, which has reported a strong profit advance for the first quarter, is regarded as having improved its position as a result of a lower trend in interests raes, which reduces its own borrowing costs.

I.B.M. posted a yearly high at 279⅜ but, like a number of other galmour issues, it closed lower for the day. I.B.M. finished at 276 with a decline of 1⅞ points.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange rose to 21.71 million shares from 18.47 million shares.

Nationwide trading in all issues listed on the Big Board increased to 25.75 million shares from 21.78 million.

Narrow Money Supply Is Off, M-2 Is Up

"In more recent weeks, the pace of monetary expansion has again moderated; short-term interest rates have stabilized or fallen back, and long-term interest rates may have begun declining again.

In his testimony before Congress last May, Dr. Burns disclosed that the Fed would seek to hold money growth from the first quarter of 1976 to the first quarter of 1977 within a range of 4½ percent to 7 percent for M-1 and 7 ½ percent to 10 percent for M-2.

This implies an average level for M-1 for the month of June from $301.4 billion to $303.8 billion. The average level for the four weeks ended June 30 was reported at $302.8 billion, according to Federal Reserve Board figures.

The implied average level for M-2 for June is $692.8 billion to $698.4 billion. The average reported yesterday for M-2 for June was $700.6 billion.

ead Prices Are Raised By St. Joe

By GENE SMITH

The lead-price increase announced on Wednesday by Asarco Inc. spread yesterday within the industry. The St. Joe Minerals Corporation, the ASARCO Corporation and the Homestake Mining Company announced yesterday that they would raise their prices by 2 cents to 25 cents a pound. The new St. Joe price is f. o. b. Herculaneum, Mo., with full freight allowed, while the Homestake price goes into effect today on supplies delivered at buyers' plants.

Price Changes

Asarco raised its price for refined lead by 1.5 cents a pound to 24.5 cents f. o. b. delivered in carload lots. Other producers took no action yesterday.

Meanwhile, Canadian copper producers, who had hesitated to move on Wednesday, yesterday took action in raising their prices somewhat in line with increases on July 1 in the United States.

Inco Ltd. said that its Canadian copper price would rise 2.375 cents a pound to 72.25 cents. Texasgulf Inc., which on Wednesday said it had not ratified the Canadian Government on pricing plans, said yesterday it had filed for an increase of 2.5 cents a pound in its copper prices.

Business Trends

Frost & Sullivan also stated that within the last year or two more than half of all building materials for home renovation were purchased directly by homeowners rather than by contractors. The research organization projects a yearly growth of the do-it-yourself market of 4.9 percent from 1977 to 1984.

The Union Camp Corporation, a diversified forest products company, is also in the do-it-yourself business through its Moore Handley subsidiary. It has been converting its home-improvement chain to self-service outlets under the name of Homecrafters stores, which are equipped with all the merchandise required to build and finish a basic building structure.

Moore Handley's plans call for opening five to eight units each year over the next few years. With the price of new homes skyrocketing, the opportunities in remodeling for the enterprising home-improvement merchandiser "is enormous," the company asserts.

Almost half of the building products line of American Standard Inc., totaling $240 million for such things as plumbing equipment, doors and fireplaces, last year went into the modernization and improvement area, said William A. Marquard, the company president and chief executive. This is considerably more than such sales in 1974.

The Sherwin-Williams Company, a leading paintmaker, told analysts recently that 18 percent of its 1975 retail sales went to the do-it-yourself market. The growing demand in this field has induced the company to transform many of its nationwide chains of paint stores into home decorating centers, modeled after its first one, opened a year ago. The original store, in Charlotte, N.C., is called Decorating World.

Such decorating centers are springing up all around the country with companies extending the products they sell to include paneling, kitchen and bathroom accessories, floor coverings and a host of other merchandise to spruce up the home.

The Johns-Manville Corporation says its Reinsal insulation product sells well because of the importance of holding down fuel costs when the temperature is low and cutting electric bills for air conditioning in hot weather. Remodeling and repair sales of its total residential building products represent more than 50 percent, the company reports. It recently introduced another money-saving water heater insulation jacket in kit form, the cost of which is made up in three years, the company claims.

Last month before a group of members of the House of Representatives, Mr. Butler of the National Home Improvement Council recommended that Congress consider a program to support "urban homesteading" as a means of restoring unoccupied or deteriorated housing into public use.

He said about 600,000 housing units were demolished each year and that an estimated 175,000 homes, taken over by the Department of Housing and Urban Development under mortgage foreclosures, were deteriorating during the slow process of restoring them to the private housing sector.

"Progress has not been what might be desired," Mr. Butler observed, citing a study by the Rutgers University Center for Urban Policy Research, which found that urban homesteading needs "a sophisticated operational framework, as well as substantial support systems, if the concept is to reach its potential."

This translates into such details as low-interest financing, property-tax breaks and a "high level of municipal services," the N.H.I.C. executive declared.

He noted that the Senate was now considering the House-approved H.R. 6860, which provides a tax credit on energy-conserving home improvements, and a Senate measure to allow low-interest loans to pay for energy-conserving home improvements as part of the national energy conservation effort.

Deferment of local property taxes for homeowners who improve their properties, comparable to that offered on commercial and multi-family residential construction, was enacted into law in Illinois last year.

"More than half of American families live in houses that are 20 years old or older. Some 12 million American families change their residence in the course of a year, and about 1.5 million new families are created every year," Mr. Butler said.

He explained that his suggestion to preserve existing residential properties stemmed from the fact that the new housing market never reached the target of 2.6 million units annually for 10 years as proposed by the Housing Act of 1968. The peak year saw 2.4 million new units produced in 1972 plunge to 1.16 million housing starts last year. Industry experts are now reducing their forecasts to less than the 1.6 million new units expected for 1976.

Marcor, which also owns Montgomery Ward & Company, was 54 percent owned by Mobil from 1974 until its merger into Mobil earlier this week.

Algerians Sue General Tire

Sonatrach, the Algerian national oil and gas company, sued the General Tire & Rubber Company yesterday in United States Court, alleging that three subsidiaries of the company made payoffs of $15 million in seeking a $327 million construction contract from Sonatrach.

Sonatrach requested a judgment of $45 million against General Tire, three times the alleged improper payments.

The lawsuit alleged that the General Tire subsidiaries paid individuals and companies to obtain a natural-gas building contract for Chemico-Africa Inc., a General Tire subsidiary. The other defendants are the Chemical Construction Company and the Aerojet-General Corporation, also General Tire subsidiaries. The project is a liquefied natural gas being built near Oran to ship gas to be shipped United States.

year's $21.8 million, or $5.29 a share.

Cook is one of a number of defendants in class-action lawsuits related to cotton and wheat merchandising activities, filed by certain cotton and wheat farmers, alleging price-fixing.

Several executives of Cook recently bought shares in their Memphis-based company, sharply increasing their holdings of the stock.

Colgate-Palmolive

Second-quarter earnings of the Colgate-Palmolive Company increased 12.5 percent to $39.6 million, or 52 cents a share, on a sales gain of 7.7 percent to $893 million, the world-wide producer of household and personal-care products reported yesterday. The company's directors increased the quarterly dividend to 22 cents a share from 19 cents, payable Aug. 15 to holders of record July 26.

The reported figures include operations of Riviana Foods Inc., acquired June 14, with Colgate-Palmolive's 1975 results restated to reflect this. Final results for the second quarter and first half will be announced July 27, following a review by auditors in accordance with regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission, the company said.

Colgate-Palmolive announced the election of two new directors: William H. Lane, president of Riviana Foods, and Baine P. Kerr, partner in the Houston law firm of Baker & Botts. Frank A. Godchaux 3d, former chairman of Riviana, and Mr. Lane have been elected vice presidents of Colgate-Palmolive.

Weather Reports and Forecast

Summary

It will be partly sunny and warm in the Northeast today; a few morning showers may develop in Metropolitan New York. Showers and thunderstorms may occur from West Virginia into the southern Ohio Valley, and in the Mississippi Valley and eastern sections of the Plains States. Except for scattered or widely scattered showers and thunderstorms in the Gulf States, Rockies and Arizona, it will be mostly sunny to partly cloudy throughout the country. Mild temperatures will be limited to the Pacific Northwest, while warm or hot weather is expected elsewhere.

Skies were cloudy yesterday over most of the Northeast; scattered thundershowers developed across the North and Middle Atlantic states and in eastern Ohio; other thundershowers were scattered in Florida, while rain fell in south-central Texas. It was hazy over the Appalachians, Ohio Valley and central Gulf States, and sunny throughout the rest of the eastern half of the country. Afternoon thunderstorms developed in North Dakota, eastern Nebraska, central Colorado, western Montana and Idaho.

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dash lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.

Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

Judge Judd had developed a custom of visiting jails and detention facilities during Christmas recesses to familiarize himself with the institutions to which he was sometimes forced to send defendants.

Worked Long Hours

According to his secretary, Frances Wasserman, the judge was in his chambers each day by 8:30 A.M. and stayed till 7 or 8 P.M. Usually, he also worked a half-day of six or seven hours on Saturdays, she said.

His visits to jails and detention facilities made him something of "an expert on prison food," the secretary said.

Among the facilities the judge had visited during his career on the Federal bench was Willowbrook.

In one of his most noted decisions, Judge Judd in 1969 issued an injunction restraining the city from requiring public school pupils to leave the classroom if they did not want to participate in the Pledge of Allegiance. The pledge nowadays is at the option of the principal of each city school, and pupils are not required to participate in any case. A spokesman for the Board of Education said the present practice was a result of Judge Judd's ruling and other judicial decisions.

He was Solicitor General of New York State under Gov. Thomas E. Dewey from 1943 to 1946.

Before being named to the Federal bench by President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1968, he had served three years as a judge of the Surrogate Court of Brooklyn.

Orrin Grimmell Judd was born in Brooklyn on Sept. 5, 1906. He was a lifelong resident of the borough. The once fashionable Clinton Hill section in which he lived had been changing character in recent years.

Began in Medicine

Young Orrin Judd graduated from Colgate University's premedical curriculum, but decided instead on a law career and, in 1930, graduated from the Harvard Law School.

While at Harvard he served as a case editor of the Harvard Law Review. He was law secretary to United States Circuit Judge Learned Hand in 1930 and 1931.

He subsequently spent a number of years in private law practice before being appointed State Solicitor General.

Judge Judd was active in a number of civic and church philanthropies, and was a trustee of Colgate.

Since 1955, he had been a member of the board of managers of the American Bible Society. His father had held the seat from 1916 to 1955.

He is survived by his wife, Persis, four children and seven grandchildren.

A memorial service is to be held today at the Aspen Institute of Humanistic Studies in Aspen, and at a later date in Brooklyn. The body is to be cremated. Burial is to take place at the Colgate University cemetery.

LOUIS GINSBERG, TRADITIONAL POET

Gave Readings With His Son, Allen, in Last Years

By THOMAS LASK

Louis Ginsberg, a much-anthologized poet and father of Allen Ginsberg, died yesterday morning at his home, 480 Park Avenue, Paterson, N.J., after an illness of six months. He was 80 years old.

Although he was a frequently published poet, it is likely that Louis Ginsberg will survive in the history of literature more as the father of the son than for any large merit of his own verses. Indeed, the readings they gave together in the last years did more for his fame than any of his previous poems.

Mr. Ginsberg worked entirely in traditional forms. "He was the heir," one critic wrote, "one might say the minion of traditional effects." Rhymed couplets and quatrains, dealing with the small facts of life, with neat, sometimes didactic, conclusions marked his many poems. One poem, "Fog," for example, begins, Boundaries vanish.

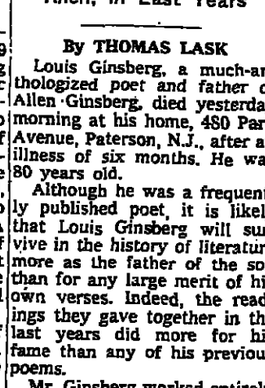
Shade after shade—
Ghostly passers,
Anonymous, fade.

And concludes:

All material
Things depart.
Now all the world
Is hinged on the heart.

It was a style that was light years away in language, image, concern and effect from the poetry of his famous son. Nevertheless, the readings, perhaps because of the sharp contrasts the men provided, would go nicely. Mr. Ginsberg never tried to copy his son's life style. Clean shaven, neatly dressed in suit and tie, he would appear on the platform looking like a business executive, while Allen would show up in open shirt bearing bells and hand cymbals for the mantras that preceded the younger man's part of the reading.



The New York Times
Louis Ginsberg

"Not every beard is a bard," the father commented once as he eyed his hirsute son, "but with Allen it grows on you."

He was an incorrigible punster. He once advised a reporter, "If at first you don't succeed, try a little ardor."

"In the spring," he remarked another time, "the boys are gallant and the girls are buoyant."

He claimed to believe in poetic coexistence. Regular meter and free verse, he said, were equal, "only I believe regular meter is more equal."

"I try to express what most people cannot express; to make permanent an idea; to see the beauty behind the commonplace; and to snare the significance of life," he once wrote.

Born in Newark

Louis Ginsberg was born in Newark and went to school there. He graduated from Rutgers and later from Columbia with an advanced degree. He moved to Paterson, where he taught English in Central High School from 1921 to 1961. After his retirement from central, he became adjunct associate professor of English at Rutgers.

He wrote his first poem for an assignment in high school and won a poetry prize at Rutgers; that started a practice that lasted to the very end of his life.

He was the author of three books: "The Attic of the Past," "The Everlasting Minute" and "Morning in Spring."

Mr. Ginsberg was twice married, first to Naomi Levy, whose long mental illness is the subject of one of the most powerful and harrowing of Allen's poems, "Kaddish." Two sons were born of that marriage, Allen and Eugene Brooks, also a poet. His second wife, who was Edith Cohen at their marriage, also survives, as do two stepchildren, Harold and Sheila Maltz.

Funeral services will be held at 10 A.M. this Sunday at the Robert Schoem Memorah Chapel, Paramus, N.J.

Donald Hardenbrook, 80, Ex-Head of N.A.M., Dead

Donald J. Hardenbrook, former president of the National Association of Manufacturers and a retired investment broker, banker and member of the New York Stock Exchange, died Monday in Nantucket, Mass., where he had lived since 1971. He was 80 years old and previously had lived in New York.

Mr. Hardenbrook served as the N.A.M. president in 1962 and was an exponent of a national "right-to-work" law, prohibiting compulsory unionism in all forms. He also urged that the philosophy of the anti-trust laws be applied to unions.

He was for many years a vice president and director of the Union Bag-Camp Paper Corporation and chairman of the American Creosoting Corporation. Starting his business career as an office boy in 1915 at the Atlas Portland Cement Company in New York, he soon became an assistant advertising manager.

He worked in the investment banking field for 20 years and from 1933 to 1943 was an independent member of the exchange. He was a great-great-grandson of one of its founders, John A. Hardenbrook. The founding took place in 1792 under a buttonwood tree growing at what is now 68 Wall Street.

In 1942, Mr. Hardenbrook served as master of ceremonies at the celebration of the 150th anniversary of the founding. On his mother's side, he was a descendant of the first white child reputedly born in New York, Sarah Jansen de Rapelje.

Mr. Hardenbrook, who was born in Jamaica, Queens, attended the Polytechnic Preparatory School in Brooklyn. He served in the Navy in World War I.

He joined the Union Bag company in 1943 and in 1958 was named chairman of its subsidiary, the American Creosoting Corporation.

Donald J. Hardenbrook

With the late Dr. Charles P. Roos, an economist and mathematician, he helped develop the Institute of Applied Econometrics and was its chairman for a number of years. He became a member of the N.A.M.-sponsored Economics Principles Commission in the early 1940's to produce monographs entitled "The American Individual Enterprise System."

In 1965, he was named president of Keep America Beautiful Inc., an organization that conducted an educational campaign against litter. He was also on the executive committee of the New York Chamber of Commerce. From 1965 to 1970, he was national president of Junior Achievement, an organization devoted to training youth in business.

Mr. Hardenbrook is survived by his wife, the former Helen Vinson; two daughters by a previous marriage, Marilyn Sherman and Hope Dresser, and two grandchildren.

Alfred Williams Is Dead at 77; Electronics Pioneer and Inventor

Alfred L. W. Williams, an inventor with more than 70 patents to his name in mechanical engineering, electronic and acoustic devices, died Wednesday at University Hospital in Cleveland. He was 77 years old and lived in Cleveland.

Mr. Williams and his associates played a role in developing the compact hearing aid, magnetic tape recording, the phonograph, sonar equipment, high-fidelity microphones and the so-called homing torpedo.

Born in Britain and educated at the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth, Mr. Williams came to this country in 1923, settling in Cleveland in 1928.

In 1932 he organized and was president of the Brush Development Company, later absorbed by the Clevite Company, from which he retired in 1972 as vice president. He pioneered in the development of piezo electronics, related to the electrical properties of crystals.

Commissioned in the Royal Navy as a teen-ager, he came out of World War I as a lieutenant commander. In 1914 he was aboard the vessel that accepted the first surrender of a German freighter.

His grandfather, the Rev. A. H. Williams, was chaplain to Queen Victoria and King Edward VII, and his father, Col. A. E. Williams, was aide-de-camp to King George VI and King Edward VIII.

In 1926, he was married to Katherine Biays, whom he met in Washington. She survives, as do two daughters, Clurie, wife of the president of the Unversity of Cincinnati, Warren Bennis, and Mrs. Leslie Mills, and three grandchildren.

WILLIAM HOFFA, 64; BROTHER OF JAMES

PONTIAC, Mich., July 8 (AP) —William Hoffa, the older brother of James R. Hoffa, the missing former head of the teamsters union, is dead, a hospital spokesman said today. He was 64 years old.

Officials at Pontiac St. Joseph Mercy Hospital said that William Hoffa died yesterday in the hospital's intensive care unit after suffering a respiratory failure.

A nurse at the facility said that he had been suffering from chronic heart disease and emphysema, a disease affecting the lungs. He was admitted at the hospital June 30.

Mr. Hoffa was a retired business agent of Teamsters Local 614 in Pontiac. He was indicted in March with Joseph M. Bane Sr., the president of Local 614, on charges of mail fraud, conspiracy and embezzlement of union funds.

A nine-count indictment charged that he had received $37,700 for union organizing work that he did not perform. He received the money between Nov. 5, 1970, and March 26, 1974, the indictment charged.

Mr. Hoffa pleaded not guilty in May at an arraignment that had been delayed because of his illness. He appeared in a wheelchair and needed the aid of an oxygen bottle to breathe.

AUGUSTA SELLIGMAN

Augusta Selligman, a psychiatric social worker, died Wednesday at her home in Louisville, Ky. She was 63 years old.

She was a graduate of Vassar College and of the Columbia University School of Social Work and was a former faculty member of the Columbia school and of the Hunter College School of Social Work.

She had also served as chief psychiatric social worker at the Child Development Center here and as director of the East Harlem Demonstration Center, a project of the Community Service Society.

She leaves a sister, Lucy S. Schneider.

The Rev. de Contenson, 57

Pierce Onthank, 72, Headed City Bank of New London

Pierce Onthank, a banking executive and former chairman of the New York chapter of the March of Dimes, died July 1 at his home in Shoreham, Vt. He was 72 years old.

Mr. Onthank had served as president of City Bank of New London, Conn., senior vice president of Chemical Bank and Franklin National Bank and as a director of Knickerbocker Federal Savings and Loan Association.

A native of Fitchburg, Mass. he was a graduate of Williams College and the Harvard University School of Business. Before moving to Vermont he lived for 30 years in Greenwich, Conn., and also maintained a home in Bermuda.

He leaves his wife, the former Nancy Fuller; a son, John of Wilton, Conn., who is president of Schwepps U.S.A. Limited; two daughters, Dorothy Hutchinson, of Pound Ridge, N.Y., and Katherin Linton, of Darien, Conn.; a brother, Elmer; a sister, Dorothea Onthank White, and eight grandchildren.

Joan Bowlus, 86, the Oldest Of Ziegfeld Follies Girls

LOS ANGELES, July 8 (AP) —Joan Bowlus, the oldest of the Ziegfeld Follies girls, died last Friday at the age of 86.

Miss Bowlus was buried here yesterday and, as she had requested, none of the mourners —who included several members of the Ziegfeld Club—were dressed in black. The club is composed of former entertainers associated with the follies.

Miss Bowlus, who was born in Leicester, England, got her start as a professional dancer in the Ziegfeld chorus line in 1916. She left in 1919 and made a name as a professional dancer in her own right, but kept her ties to the follies. She spent her last years in a tiny apartment in Venice, Calif.

AURORA STEWART BULL

Aurora Stewart Bull, a coloratura soprano who sang on radio in the 1920's and was a voice teacher, died Tuesday in Mountainside Hospital, Montclair, N. J. She was 80 years old and lived in Upper Montclair.

Mrs. Bull was the widow of Johan Randulf Bull, who was the Norwegian vice-consel for New Jersey. She performed on WOR, WAAM, WGBS and WIBS, specializing in "songs of child hood."

Management

houses, some of which even approach their annual budgets rather informally—at Merrill Lynch holds certain similarities to, say, Union Carbide.

At Merrill Lynch, the critical formula is "management by objective." In a sense, this represents an evolution of the firm's long-standing concept of establishing profit centers and then keeping tabs on performance.

"We've always been bottom-line oriented," said the 57-year-old Mr. Regan, a former Marine Corps major who went through the training school and started climbing the ladder as an account executive. Back in 1960, while other brokerage houses merely chanted "sell-sell-sell," he instituted a planning department when he assumed administrative responsibilities.

What, precisely, is management by objective?

It means that each official of the firm, from a branch office manager in Detroit up to the chief executive officer in the home office at 1 Liberty Plaza, has a specified number of goals to accomplish. Furthermore, every operating unit, ranging from the research department to municipal bond sales, also has its own set of objectives. The firm conducts periodic reviews to determine the success — or shortcoming — of hundreds of managers and every unit.

But Merrill Lynch, with its typical passion for fine tuning techniques, does not stop there. "We felt we needed a finer definition of responsibilities and accountability," explained Roger E. Birk, 45, president of the brokerage firm and heir-apparent to Mr. Regan.

Today, the results of a management consultant study of 1974 are just beginning to pay off. The firm has instituted "position charters" that delineate, precisely and in writing, the purpose of each organization unit or executive. This helps to pinpoint accountability for a firm with 287 offices throughout the world and with 19,246 employees and 1.5 million active customer accounts.

One management technique that has worked well for Merrill Lynch over the years is its constant open communications between staff and line. For example, Mr. Regan meets quarterly with a management advisory committee of senior account executives who come to New York for a three-day session and, late in August, he will head a group of officials attending a meeting of Western Region office managers in California.

To chart long-term strategy, the firm instituted an ongoing five-year plan in 1969 with the purpose of examining its strong and weak areas. This, in turn, is refined into an annual business plan.

It was determined in 1969 that Merrill Lynch should become a more important factor in block trading and institutional research—the firm foresaw then the critical importance of institutions as customers. Today, from virtually a standing start, it has become a significant Wall Street factor in both areas.

Occasionally, however, even the best-laid plans of Merrill Lynch go awry. It organized a company to sell gold ingots at the start of 1975, but response has been less than enthusiastic.

Part of Merrill Lynch's secret is that it prepares zealously to have a group of top managers who have gained experience at a variety of job responsibilities—the process is known as "career pathing."

On Tuesday, Thomas J. Cassady is slated to become president of the brokerage firm. At 55, he has headed such diverse areas as commodities, the services group and the branch-office system.

At that time, Mr. Birk will become president and chief administrative officer of Merrill Lynch & Company, the holding company, of which the brokerage firm is the brightest star. Mr. Regan is chairman and chief executive of both the brokerage concern and the holding company, which is reaching into new fields of financial services.

Subsidiaries of the holding company already include a government-securities unit, life insurance and cash commodities, while real estate financing and merchant banking are carried on under the banner of the brokerage firm.

Meanwhile, Merrill Lynch is still planning ahead.

Charles E. Merrill, who in 1941 formed the nucleus of what is now the world's largest brokerage firm, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc.

GENERAL WALKER FACES SEX CHARGE

DALLAS, July 8 (UPI)—Bob Shaw, public information officer for the Dallas Police Department, said today that Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, retired, an advocate of right-wing politics, was arrested June 23 on a charge of public lewdness in a restroom at a city park.

General Walker, 66 years old, was arrested by a plainclothes park police officer late in the evening in a restroom at the park, Mr. Shaw said.

In his report, the park officer charged that General Walker "fondled" him, Mr. Shaw said.

General Walker was charged with a Class A misdemeanor and was released the next day after posting a $200 bond. No trial date was set, but the case will probably be heard in late August in Dallas County Criminal Court. The maximum penalty is a $2,000 fine or a year in jail, or both.

The general was the plaintiff in a landmark Supreme Court libel decision in 1963 arising out of his arrest on a charge of inciting a race riot at Oxford, Miss. The Court held that General Walker was a "public figure" and that The Associated Press and several newspapers had not shown malice in the alleged libel.

As a general, he commanded elements of the 101st Airborne Division sent to Little Rock, Ark., by President Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1957 to enforce integration at Little Rock Central High School.

suppose we'll be able to get tickets?".

The Kelleys saw "Pippin" on their last visit to New York last year and liked it.

They go to the city every five or six years. Mr. Kelley is a native of New Jersey who married a Southerner and moved south, as thousands of others have done since World War II. His parents live in West Orange.

Mrs. Kelley was born and reared at nearby Fayetteville in the Ozark Mountains. Her mountain drawl is now slightly more pronounced than her husband's. When he is asked where home is now, he points to his hillside farm and says firmly, "Right here."

Mr. Kelley, 37 years old, is a lawyer in this town of 13,000 people. Like many small-town professional and business men, he is a farmer on the side. The Kelleys live on a 63-acre farm in the mountains five miles northeast of here.

They have 18 head of cattle and four horses. Neighbors and friends have been asked to look in on the livestock next week, especially to keep an eye on the weaning calves, which sometimes break through fences and wander away when their mothers cut off their milk.

Eight-year-old Ashley, the oldest of the three daughters, who will stay home with a sitter, has been coached on caring for the chickens. The Kelleys have 45 laying hens. The eggs must be gathered, washed and put in cartons every afternoon to be sold to Mr. Kelley's law partners and other friends.

Glenn, 14, generally takes care of the hens and pockets the egg money. He and Jodie, 15, will be in New York next week.

Jodie had to get permission to be absent from a training camp for the Rogers High School drill team, a group of girls who march at football games.

Mrs. Kelley had to cancel an appointment with an orthodontist.

Tasks for Those at Home

Ashley, besides caring for the chickens, will have to give medicine to a sick dog named Tundra.

Mabel Simon, the sitter, whom the Kelley children look upon as a third grandmother, will water the dozens of pot plants in and around the big new native-stone house.

It will also be Mrs. Simon's task to explain, perhaps daily, why the two youngest daughters, Heather, 5, and Shelby, 3, will have to stay home from the swimming pool while their mother-chauffeur is gadding about New York.

Mr. Kelley first began angling for a slot as a Carter delegate in December. He and Mrs. Kelley, who is chairman of the Benton County Democratic Committee, organized his campaign throughout northwest Arkansas.

He was one of 130 persons seeking four delegate posts from the Third Congressional District. The Kelleys and their friends made hundreds of telephone calls and mailed hundreds of letters. They wound up with a food and soft-drink reception [illegible] state convention at [illegible] Rock.

At the same time, t[illegible] leys were working f[illegible] Carter's candidacy. Bo[illegible] culated petitions to [illegible] Carter's name on the [illegible] sas primary ballot. M[illegible] ley was the Carter [illegible] chairman for this C[illegible] sional District.

Dentsply to Make AD International Bid

By HERBERT KOSHETZ

Dentsply International Inc. of York, Penn., announced yesterday that it would again make a $32 million tender offer for AD International of London. Dentsply is a manufacturer of dental supplies and equipment and AD International is a distributor of such products.

Under terms of the proposal which is similar to that made in December 1975, Dentsply is offering $1.24 in cash and about 81 cents in 9 percent sterling-dollar convertible unsecured loan stock for each of 15,506,000 shares of AD International. Dentsply currently owns 62,500 shares of the British company.

Dentsply dropped its tender offer in December because of what it described as "technical" difficulties associated with financing the cash portion of the offer through a bank loan.

U.S. Not to Oppose Celotex Acquisition

The Justice Department said in Washington yesterday that it would not oppose the acquisition by Celotex Corporation of the Jacksonville, Fla., gypsum wallboard plant of the Kaiser Cement & Gypsum Corporation.

The Justice Department position on Celotex, a subsidiary of the Jim Walter Corporation was in a letter issued June 8 and released yesterday after the customary 30-day delay.

Both Celotex and Kaiser have been large producers of gypsum wallboard, but in the past year, Kaiser closed its plants in Jacksonville, Fla., and Delano, N.J.

American Hospital Signs Accord for Consyne Corp.

The American Hospital Supply Corporation said yesterday that it had signed a definitive agreement for the acquisition of the Consyne Corporation through exchange of American Hospital stock valued at about $26.7 million. An agreement in principle for the acquisition was announced on March 18, 1976.

Under terms of the agreement American Hospital Supply will exchange 776,688 of its shares for the shares of Consyne on the basis of three tenths of a share of American Hospital for each share of Consyne stock.

Sonsyine, located in San Marcos, Calif., a maker of orthodontic and orthopedic products, reported 1975 sales of $14.2 million and a net of $1.5 million. American Hospital Supply of Evanston, Ill., had a net of $55.1 million on sales of $1.14 billion.

Soybeans Soar on Rumors

cent a pound, the daily limit. This apparently helped spark speculative enthusiasm for soybeans again in a hectic trading session on the Chicago Board of Trade, marked by rumors of export demand and talk of farmers holding back soybeans from the market for higher prices. Meanwhile, rainfall continues to help the new crop.

Wheat and corn prices gained 3 and 4 cents a bushel in most deliveries. After the close of trading Continental Grain announced sale of 400,000 tons of wheat and 300,000 tons of corn and the Bunge Corporation announced sale of 300,000 tons of wheat, all to the Soviet.

This brings to about 3.8 million tons the amount of wheat and corn purchased under the agreement which calls for the Russians to buy a minimum of 6 million tons of the grains each year beginning with Oct. 1 and later deliveries.

Commodity Price Index Up 4.7 From Week-Ago Level

The commodity spot market price index of foodstuffs and industrial materials rose to 215.6 from 210.9 last week.

The index compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics stood at 193.5 on July 8, 1975.
